Interesting Information!

TYENDINAGA RESERVE

From Our Own Correspondent.

The Sunday Schools in the parish will open on Sunday next at Christ Church at 9:30 a.m.
at All Saints 2:15 p.m., and Mission School
3 p.m.

It is to be hoped that all interested will make an effort to clean up Christ Church Cemetery so beautifully situated and visited frequently during the summer months by strangers.

Walter A. Brant is working in addition to his own place, the farm of Jacob B. Brant.
Walter has a good team and can put in a large crop.

The Rev. Mr. Wilson, of the Shingwauk Home, Sault Ste. Marie, gives a favorable account of the intelligence and progress of the pupils at the school.

The proposition to form a road and build a vault on the Reserve were thrown out by the general council. No funds to spare for new fangled notions.

We have been informed that Chief Jacob B.
Brant was elected a member of the council of the "Indian Research and Aid Society" at its inaugural meeting in Ottawa last week.

High rents, poor crops and low prices have had the effect of leaving several farms on the Reserve without tenants and consequently in competition.

The engine of the Ferry Steamer Prince Edward is in excellent condition; it is pity that her captain is not permitted to try its powers.

This is still a great field of sickness upon the Reserve, the consequence of "the grippe".

Mr. Thomas Rayburn, for many years one of the best tenants on the Reserve, died on the 24th of April. The funeral service was conducted at Christ Church on Saturday, after which the body was removed to the Reserve vault at which cemetery the remains will be interred.

Miss Nettie Clark is suffering from a second attack of the grippe.

Business has been very active about Baker's grain dock the past week; no less than three vessels cleared from there for Ontario on the 21st.

The Ferry Abitibi has been making regular trips to the village.

Andrew McLean, son of Samuel Claus, was buried at Christ Church cemetery on Monday, the 24th of April.

Miss Anderson, of the parsonage, has been fairly successful in making the Parochial collection for the Missions Fund of the Diocese.

David Smith, the veteran pumper, has been engaged in the orchards of those in the vicinity who know how to appreciate well trimmed trees.
Dave can still handle a saw with skill and expert grafting is as good as ever.

The Ferry Abitibi has been making
regular trips to the village.

We are sorry to learn of the serious illness of Mrs. Alexander Loft and earnestly hope she may soon recover.

Remember the concert in Union Hall this evening.

KINGSFORD.

From Our Own Correspondent.

Miss O'Hare has returned to Plainfield,
Miss Marion Doyle, of Deseronto, was home on Saturday for two days.

Mr. Edward Brennan has returned home and have taken up their residence on the 5th con. Tyendinaga.

Mrs. James McCullough is now convalescent,
Mrs. Dulmase, of Deseronto, was visiting her father Mr. Charles Wright this week.

We are glad to learn that she is rapidly recovering from the effects of her recent severe accident. Dr. Whitman has pronounced her out of danger and considers that she is progressing satisfactorily.

Mr. George Farney is visiting his daughter Mrs.
McQuaid at Pickering after which he intends going to Shakespeare to visit his son.

Mrs. Sargent has returned home after visiting her friends in Belleville for the last three weeks.

Mr. John Turnbull is erecting a fine new barn.

The adjourned Annual Vestry Meeting of the congregation of St. Jude's Church was held on Wednesday 23rd inst., the Rev. C. O'Dell Bayley in the chair. The Treasurer presented his financial statement which was as satisfactory as could be expected.

The Finance Committee appointed Mr. James Hewitt as people's churchwarden and Mr. Alexander Hewitt was elected people's churchwarden. Mr. A.
Hewitt was elected Treasurer and Mr. B. A.
Fox, Secretary.

The last few weeks have been remarkably fine, although during the last week we had night with cold winds in the mornings.

Our weather prophet has been remarking that the new moon was towards the north a sure indication they say of cold weather. On Saturday and Sunday we had the long desired rain which was welcome and will be beneficial and good growth. It has been a favorable season for sowing and a large acreage was sown last week.

The Forest Mills Cheese Factory commenced operations on Wednesday last, April 26th.

The Emery Hill Factory commenced on Wednesday 1st inst., and the Albert Factory begins next Monday 6th inst.

Mr. Abbott made over 3000 lbs. of maple sugar and 225 lbs. of maple syrup.

Mr. Henry Seventh had a large left hand badly crushed on Saturday by a large heavy door falling on it. Dr. Newton dressed the wound. He has returned home for a few days.

Mrs. Fred McCann is now to Newburgh, out of the country ill with her father, who died on Wednesday morning.

Mrs. John McCullough of Belleville was here for two days and returned home on Monday.

We had fine April showers on Tuesday.

Mr. William Sampson left this morning for Watertown, N.Y.

The wet weather has interfered considerably with farming operations this week.

The Misses Farney intend starting for Bay City, Michigan, on May 1st., to reside permanently.

Mrs. Jennie Morley is visiting friends in Picton.

Michael Sheehan has leased his farm on Bay Street for a term of years to Peter Holmes for $100 per year.

Mr. McCann, of Kingston, is the guest of Mrs. George Smith.

Frederick Gates, accompanied by his aunt Mrs. Tyanner of Syracuse, spent Sunday with friends in South Crosby.

Katie Tempest, Soubrette.

CHAPTER I.
AFTER THE PLAY.

"Don't be funny," said he.

Touchy pouted on my dressing room door and demanded: "Am you ready?"

"No, I'm not," said I.

I knew I had been long getting my make up off, but a rough soubrette part takes so much paint.

"How long do you think I am going to wait for you?" Touchy shouted again.

I answered shortly: "You needn't any- other minute. No one asked you any- how."

Dead silence fell. I grew anxious. It was late and raining on the icy walkways. As I sat at my dressing room door, Touchy stood digging a hole in a post that supported the stage. I said meekly:

"You'll have the stage down on us. I was in a furious temper and turned round with a jerk.

"Don't be funny!" said he. "I only waited because I have something serious to say."

"For heaven's sake!" said I.

"What would you have done had I gone and left you?" Touchy asked severely.

I said Nibs, our "Props," whistling, and I promptly returned: "Asked Nibs, to take me, or— or gone alone."

Touchy brought his fist down on my table. "That's just it. If you think I am standing around to do things for you be- cause others are not there, you are mis- taken! What you want done in this company I'll do. The sooner you under- stand it the better. That or nothing."

Did ever one hear such impudence? I stamped my foot and made more noise than his fist had, and said emphatically: "Then, Mr. Gerald Touch, it's nothing! I won't have you or any one taking upon himself to do 'everything' for me. You haven't done very much goodness knows, and I'm not asking you to do that; and it gives you no right to bully me. I can take care of myself."

"All right," said Touchy, with a ready sweep of his hand, and he put on his hat and strode toward the back door.

"Gerald Touch," I cried, "are you de- liberately going to leave me when it's so— so slippery?"

"Miss Katie Tempest has refused my assistance and is— mocking me, 'at liberty to take care of herself,'"

"You're a brute," said I, sternly.

Touchy considered a moment and then said: "I won't be mean. Come along. But after this— He made a gesture that was a cross between washing his hands of me and expressing utter contempt for me. Only a thought of the slippery paper prevented my ordering him out when a voice sung out from a back room: 'Don't go with him, Katie! I'll take care of you!'"

"Oh! thank you!" I shouted back.

Touchy jammed his hat over his eyes and slammed himself out.

I sat down on a barrel of nails, and waited for Mr. Straight, or Mr. Ned, as I always called him. Mr. Straight was so formal, yet, being older than I and married, it didn't seem just right to say Ned.

If there is a theater in the country that is a hole of a place it is this one in Cincinnati. The dressing rooms are down cellar, and such a cellar! I thought as I took a look around what a glittering life an actress' life must be! I envied many of a, soubrette, in a good company, sitting down at a keg of nails, down cellar, at half-past four at night, having had my head bashed off by one man and now relying on the good nature of another to get me home through puddles and over wet ice to the hotel. Home! Ugh! And all the lights going out, too.

Just then Mr. Ned's door opened, the streak of yellow light was thrown across the floor, scattering the cinders.

"What's the matter with Touchy?" Mr. Ned asked, still shaking himself his coat.

After I had helped him, and been hauled up the icy steps, and well staid homeward through the puddles, I began a plaintive explanation: "Touchy is so exacting. I can't agree to let just him do everything for me, can I? And he bullies me so. I'd rather take care of myself than be ordered and dumped around. I— I won't have it."

I began to sputter again. "My girls would be proud to have so handsome a fellow as Touchy anxious to take care of them," Mr. Ned remarked, laughing shortly.

"They would make a great mistake," I protested. "It is supposed to be a fine thing when a man is anxious to do things for one. Instead, it is only tending to death. Touchy was much nicer when he let me alone."

"But he cares more for you now."

"Of course. Oh! love stories are frank. Now that he cares for me, I must do as he says or be bullied. I'm dragged out for long walks when I'm to the bank, when I don't want to save it at all. He makes me eat bread and cheese alone in my room, after the theatre, because he says I can't afford a restaurant, and that is important for people to come so late to see us."

I said: "Oh! the man who likes you better than you like him is very wearing. Nobody knows but one who goes through it."

"So you have been through it?" Mr. Ned questioned dryly.

"Not very much. No one has cared really for me. They have just thought they did enough to bother me. Bennie Shine last year, for instance. He was funny enough to tell of, and it will show you what I mean."

"He played my lover. Suddenly he took to staring at me fixedly. Then he began doing things for me—miserable for my money. I had to have him bashed off my shoulders, took me to the theatre and back till I protested that I did not want to bother him. He began to cry—he was very young—and said 'nothing done for me was a bother. I thought him homesick, and I patted his shoulder and said it would be all right. Then there he grabbed my hand, shouting, 'Oh! would it?'"

"'Oh! would what? said I. He talked a great deal about his misery. My hair stood straight—one man had even been in it with me before, and I thought it awful. I tried to talk as fast as he—he kept saying that, dear me, I didn't love, and couldn't, and never would, and that he must get off the floor. Then he got up, slapped his hat on the back of his head, and started for the door, saying he would drown himself. I clung to his coat tails, weeping and saying, 'No, no. When he broke away I flew to Mrs. Barker, our old lady.' She had till then cried. I thought he was unfeeling. Sure enough, however, Bennie turned up safe at last. He told me in an awful whisper. 'I was eating my cakes, that he could not find the river!'"

Mr. Ned laughed so that I went on: "I had an awful time with him. He was not naturally truthful and honest, and since he was ready to die for me if he could find the river—I felt I ought to reform him. I exerted all my influence, and went through a great deal. He used to sit glaring at me till my blood ran backwards. He let his hair grow long, that he might pull it in his eyes and look worse."

"Did he reform?" asked Ned, cynically.

"Not much," I confessed; "but he tried. When I caught him in stories he would threaten to cut his throat. Naturally it kept me nervous. Besides, I was always afraid we would get into a town with a river. He left the company before the season closed. He went on his knees and called me his good angel, adding that he was going to be an honorable man, and that the day would come when, with a spotless career to point to, he would return and claim me for his bride. I explained that I wouldn't have it, but at the last moment he waved a lock of my hair out of the car window, and said, 'The day will come. Won't it be awful if it ever does?'"

"Didn't you encourage him, Katie?" asked Mr. Ned, in his usual mentor fashion.

"What for?" I inquired; "was it any fun for me? I tried to be kind to him, and pull him through. For myself it only kept me in a state of jittersomeness and scare."

We were at the hotel. After waiting at the ladies' entrance for the sleeping porter to unlock the door, I gave up and went with Mr. Ned through the office, to be stared at, of course, like a wild animal."

"Good night," said Mr. Ned at my door; "go in and eat your cheese," and he made a grimace and went up the hall to his room.

I closed the door after me and looked at my place. It was not cheerful. Square, low-ceiled room, worn carpet, oil lamp in front of the bed and bare boards under, and one piece of furniture to do duty as bureau and washstand, yellow shades, one hanging limply, half torn from the rod, and the other twisted and stuffed in the lamp base. The iron bedstead was topped with so thin a layer of feathering that I felt I was going to sleep on a cold waffle, one gas jet away in a corner and high, the flame shooting up a long blue finger and whistling dizzily. On a small uncertain table some odd ends of bread and bits of cheese, and a glass of pale milk. I banged my Tam O'Shanter to the floor, and said aloud, with a gusty sigh, "Jolly fun being a promising young actress, isn't it?"

A thump at the door behind me nearly fractured my shoulder. Touchy was there. He beamed upon me genially and said, "Supper in Ned's room. You may come if you will toast the bread."

"Oh! Touchy, may I?" I cried.

"Don't gush— come along," said Touchy.

"All right," said Touchy, with a ready sweep of his hand, and he put on his hat and strode toward the back door.

"Gerald Touch," I cried, "are you de- liberately going to leave me when it's so— so slippery?"

"Miss Katie Tempest has refused my assistance and is— mocking me, 'at liberty to take care of herself,'"

"You're a brute," said I, sternly.

"Don't do that!" Diggers objected, shouting violently. "I wouldn't eat bread in a basin of water, you know. Wearing my hair parted in the middle makes me look more of a fool than I am—don't forget that."

Touchy said there was no telling, and began to slice my hair out cheese. There was nothing about which he didn't know more than any one else.

We were to have a rabbit. Ned cooked rabbits to perfection. Being the only girl I should have done all the work, but between being so pleased at a chance to assist at the supper at all and being shown how to do everything by Touchy I kept getting into trouble. At last I was stood on a chair to the pan of water, balanced on a patent affair above the gas.

The table was "set" by this time and drawn under the gas. Three plates. Touchy and I had to share a plate. Some salt on a piece of programme and in the center of the table the soap dish filled with jam—bought especially for me, they said, and which on a previous occasion I had stolen from the strawberry jam. Every one rushed for me, but before a rash endeavor of mine to remove the pan had imperiled its equilibrium and scalded my hand.

I was dragged from the chair, the table hauled from under the hot waterfall, and a bucket substituted, while Mr. Ned put out the gas over which the pan stood. This was an awful voice Touchy said: "This is an awful voice present if they ever hear of a woman deliberately allowing a pan of water to boil over into a dish of strawberry jam?"

No one could recall a circumstance so reprehensible.

"You only told me to say when it boiled, and I did," I whimpered; "before, I hate strawberry jam, anyhow."

Then it transpired to the indignation of the men, that Touchy had bought the jam because he liked it, and that his information as to my taste in that direction had been less certain than he had pretended. This diverted wrath from me. When it got around again I said forlornly:

"I scalded my hand anyhow."

Whereat Touchy became enraged and uncomplimentary. While he gently tuck up my hand in an unnecessary wet towel, he bade Diggers witness that I had been sent for at Ned's suggestion, and that it would have been much better had I come.

At this I began to cry, but had only dropped on one tear when Mr. Ned said, in quiet command:

"Cheese is ready!"

We all around, hustled little under the Touchy's instructions, on the plates and held our breath. Ned, with the handle of aсан can wrapped in a towel and held in one hand, while he stirred the creamy melted cheese with the shoehorn we kept for a spoon, sidled to the table and poured the concoction over the toast. A delicious aroma filled the air. The cheese was just at that point of molten excellence that makes a rabbit deserve its name.

Diggers produced from the window sill a bottle of beer. Touchy would have none and scolded me for taking half a glass that I took a whole one.

"You will come to a drunkard's grave," as beginning a long speech. "You are young. So am I. But we'll get over that. You are frivolous, but I can cure that. As it is, I haven't enough control of you. I have made up my mind that I must get you at once the whole management of you."

I said I had a way out and I asked quickly: "Do you want— to— star me, Touchy?"

He said he hadn't thought of it, but, independently, that he would see next year. Then he jerked his head up, and was going to kiss me. I fell in a limp mass away from him and against the fence, whereat he said severely: "Come, Katie, don't be foolish. Having just asked you to marry me, I ought to have some rights."

I declared that he hadn't, and that I wouldn't stand it.

"Never having done it before," said he with dignity, "I was perhaps not clear, but I did the best I could, Miss Tempest, and I certainly ought to kiss you."

"Oh! Touchy," wailed I, beginning to snivel, "what an awful thing."

"Not when you're used to it," he returned cheerily, again preparing to kiss me.

His serene confidence enraged me. I stamped my foot, crying how did he know I wanted to marry him.

"Because," said he in a blood curdling way, "you have encouraged me."

He said "encouraged" with tenfold power of emphasis and conviction. I became panic stricken.

"No, no!" I cried. "I haven't, and never meant to. Oh! dear! and oh! dear!"

Touchy seemed gradually to catch the idea.

"Do I understand, Miss Tempest," said he, "that you have stricken tone, 'that you are not loveable'?"

"Not the least in the world!" I cried, "and please don't call me Miss Tempest. I'm awfully fond of you, Touchy, but I'd rather die than marry you. Don't be angry, but you'd make awful husband, I know, Touchy."

"Because," said he in a blood curdling way, "you were not well; your health will be awfully monotonous; you will never know the weariness of the first night of measles, when it was so nice to lie in mother's lap and feel her cool hand on your forehead; you will never know joys of convalescence; your changes were monotonous and every one was kind to you, Touchy."

He contradicted that indignantly, and launched out into a lecture again, barefaced coquetry and impudence, which I with tearful vehemence contested. Half way home I ventured in a miserable, shabby house to the room of the three newest men in the world.

Eating over, we piled the dishes in the middle of the room in his face, and we laughed till we could eat no more. One story Mr. Ned stopped in the middle of, glancing at me: "Quite right?" said Touchy, testily; "put her into the closet?" So into the closet I went till the room closed with shouts of laughter.

Al! it was all so pleasant! When I remembered how awful might have been, I blessed Diggers and Touchy for the three newest men in the world.

TYENDINAGA RESERVE

From Our Own Correspondent.
On account of the unusual state of the weather, Arbor day was not observed at the Eastern School on the 2nd inst., but on the 7th when the teacher and children had a happy time.

We are glad to see that Chief Isaac Powles is able to be about again after a very serious illness.

The person and Miss Anderson, who are themselves of a pass from the general manager of the New York Central, are to Tweed, to attend the confirmation held there on the 8th inst.

The teachers of the Reserve attended the Teachers Convention at Belleville on Thursday and Friday; the youngsters enjoyed the holiday.

Debby Brant, of Deseronto, is seriously ill with pneumonia following an attack of grippe.

The people who farm are pretty well on with sowing and crop put in early are looking well. Good prospects for hay on the Reserve this season.

On each Sunday afternoon may be seen a score or more lads assembled for no good purpose, passing in the street, the weather being cool and damp, and the ground frozen. However there is scarcely any growth as yet as warmer weather is necessary to cause the seed to germinate. Fall wheat is not injured as much in this section as was thought it would be, and thirty per cent of it was winter killed. A great deal of clover, however was badly injured by frost and ice during the past winter.

Seedings operations having been completed the farmers are resting on their oars, for a little while. They have enjoyed a favorable season for putting in the seed, the weather being cool and damp, and the ground frozen.

On the 10th inst. the St. Lawrence Indians, the proprietors of fall pastures, where crowds of our women were daily seen congregated, prepared to receive goods in advance.

The Ferry Arbitration fizzle has left the Railways in a state of suspense, the business with liberty appears to be in a state of trespassing upon the Reserve. Travellers may now wait until the boys are ready, when Billy ferried, to wait a few minutes was a criminal offence.

Miss Lydia Hill, the efficient organist of All Saints Church, left on Thursday for a trip to Winnipeg and other points in the Northwest.

CHAPTER III.

LOVERS AND FRIENDS.

It was a relief to reach Boston, and I had been there for years. The boys had grown to men, and they were all agreeable to me without embarrassing me after the manner of Tracy. I anticipated two weeks of peace and happiness. There was hardly time for them all. Bright Hale had grown rich, and had goodness known how many fortunes, and a yacht besides. Ernest Marvel, the boy I cared best for at school, was now tall and good-looking. He was a member of the local concert tickets and art tickets, and there was no moment of my life for which he had not some. Then Harry Blake owned a big store, and so on, and so on. My heart kept buzzing all the time.

Bright saw the most of me. He had a brawny way of monopolizing one, and beside he was just starting on a business trip to California. The last Friday of my stay he went away. He shook hands, kissed my cheek, kindly reminded me that I was his best girl forever, and that I might use his carriage as often as I wished.

During Ernest called. I rushed down to the parlor complaining that I thought myself forgotten.

"No, I couldn't forget you, even a minute," Ernest said somberly. A queer little chill went down my back, but I dismissed it. "I thought," he went on, harshly, "you would be in mourning for Bright."

"He is not dead," I returned, stupidly. "I will see him again."

"I suppose so," Ernest answered, and fell into heavy silence, which he presently broke by a low, feeble, apologetic whisper of his usual manner. I complained of it, and since he did not mind, I cried: "You don't talk like yourself, you should talk at all?" and forthwith began playing jigs and breakdowns on the piano, till he stopped his walk up and down, saying hoarsely:

"For heaven's sake, don't!"

"Aren't you rather imperative and emphatic?" I questioned.

He seemed sorry and asked meekly: "When do you go?"

"When you like—this minute, for instance."

He seemed hurt and explained gravely that he meant to ask when did I leave the city.

"To-morrow morning, 9 o'clock," I answered.

He resumed his walk. I moved restlessly and sighed, aware of a general discontent at my questions as possible, though his usual manner. I complained of it, and since he did not mind, I cried:

"You don't talk like yourself, you should talk at all?" and forthwith began playing jigs and breakdowns on the piano, till he stopped his walk up and down, saying hoarsely:

"For heaven's sake, don't!"

I got a dreadful solemn feeling. From some inspiration right from my heart I walked over to him, and laying my hand as near his shoulder as I could reach, I said, in a very gentle voice for me: "Please, dear Ernest, we have known each other all our lives—ever since I was a little girl I have been fond of you, and we shall be sorry to say good by, but it will not tear my heart out, nor yours either. He moved as if to speak, but I stopped him. "You don't think me unchaste because for a few years you have not seen me. You and I are friends, just as we were at school. We can never be any more or any less. It is a lovely thing to be friends so, and it would be cruel if I should or you should do anything to spoil or change it—would it not, Ernest? No, don't answer. No one should think twice of me, Ernest. I am just as I used to be—selfish and thoughtless and frivolous. I haven't a bit of heart, dear Ernest—in fact I haven't, except so much as can come with regret if any one for whom I care comes to pain through me. Please understand, Ernest, and don't let's talk of it any more—please, please, for my sake!"

I had been hurried on by some frightened impulse. It seemed to me that it would be the saddest thing in the world if Ernest should change. The tears were in my eyes at the thought. His face softened and gleamed as if from an inward light. He clasped his hands over mine that was pushed against him, and, bending, kissed my fingers. Then he whispered:

"I know, Katie, you are warning me. Out of your gentle heart you are trying to save me the pain of the mistake which, for all that, I must make. It is too late, and I must go through with it, mistake or not. Do you think I could see you as I have and my heart not grow about you till only you are there, and will you be there is no hope for me?"

I am a big fellow, and I don't know much about love, but I know a few things, but it is humble enough, is it not? I put my knee to the ground—so hard and lifting my arms only to touch your hands, tell you that I love you—I love you—I love you!"

He turned his face with a sort of sob against my dress. I said, a limp, miserable wretch, into the chair behind me, and leisurely rubbing his head, he said, more or less, that it was so sorry, that for the world I could not give him pain, but that I knew I should be a wicked girl if I did not honestly tell him the truth. He stood unsteadily asking: "And that is?"

"That I do not love you the least in the world more than I always have." I made answer, crying softly: "that—oh forgive me, Ernest—I know I never shall feel for you in that manner."

He took me close in his arms, kissing my forehead and cheek and eyelids. His lips were cold. Then he put me to him, saying vaguely, "Good by!"

"No, Ernest," I cried: "you must not go that way. You must care for me as you always have—as I care for you."

and always will. Our dear friendship must not be broken up. I cannot spare it; I will not. You will forget that you ever felt like that!"

"Do you think so?" he asked—and his eyes had such a look of somber pain in them that I could as if I were to burst him. "What could you do to turn me away?" "Have I rights?" I cried: "can you take from me a friendship I have never forfeited? The sincerest proof of which I have, just given. I never wanted you to love me, and I won't have it. I won't give you up. I hate people to love me. Why could you not be nice, and fond of me, as Bright Hale is, and say so?"

At the name his face darkened. "Had Bright Hale asked your answer it would have been different," he said doggedly.

I gave a small scream of rage. "Oh! What would it? Please let me tell you Bright would not do such a thing. He is too kind to repay a girl for a friendship which has lasted nearly as long as mine, has, by falling in love with her, and then throwing her off as if in distress. Bright Hale would not do so cruel, unkind, harsh, dreadful, disastrous a thing as loving me. He—"

A discreet rustle at the door and Mary entered. "Mr. Hale, Miss," she said, and in walked Bright. Ernest broke into laughing.

"You see?" he said, and then to Bright: "Good luck, old fellow. I must just leave."

I lifted my hands in protest against his bitter judgment, and with a hurried word to Bright, followed Ernest to the door, saying: "Please forget it all and be friends!" He drew a long breath that made me feel his heart was breaking, and said hoarsely, his arms straining about me: "Let me say once more that I love you. I shall have no right soon."

"I will not let him turn away, and I said in an eggshell-like voice: "Please, Bright, look at me. You can't see that you can't see me, can you not? First, make me of that. Then be kind and generous and good, and don't you throw me off. I cannot lose all my friends."

"Ernest, too," said he, the thought just coming to him.

Then he lifted my face, and looked at me. I was not afraid, but when I could not see any more for tears I asked again: "Be friends, Bright."

He drew a long breath, and said: "You're a brave little girl, Katie." After a moment, he went on: "Every one is falling in love with you, and nothing is bothering your life out. Well, at least I don't know that. I'll be friends, Katie."

The words came slowly, and his lips, although he smiled, were so white that I hastened to show how much I appreciated his goodness.

"Thank you—thank you," I said, adding earnestly: "I love you more for that than ever I did before."

His face twitched and he said, smiling again: "It would be kind to choose your words better, Katie." Then after a long stare at me, he said with complete return to his old manner: "Good-by, Katie. I must get away from you now, but don't think any more of all this. Only remember, no matter how many lovers you have, you're one friend."

"Thank you, Bright," I said, again laughing aloud from happiness.

He made a face half comic and half serious. "Don't laugh. I'm going to shoot myself, maybe. That's what they all do, isn't it?"

"Or drown themselves," I observed weakly. "Or—go to the devil?"

I stood on a hassock, reached my arms about his neck, and kissed him on both cheeks, saying gratefully: "You have been such a kind to me, Bright, and indeed I'm very thankful."

"Well, you ought to be," he asserted, grimly. Wringing my hand he said another cheery "Good-by; remember your friend," and was gone.

I sighed a big sigh. Ah! how much nicer friendship was than anything else, I thought gratefully.

ing hands behind him. "I can no longer see you but that my heart leaps to hold you in my arms forever. Yes, I have changed. The look of your eyes puts me in mind of him to turn away."

"Have I rights?" I cried: "how can you take from me a friendship I have never forfeited? The sincerest proof of

"To the last that I have to stay with him, and stick to the last that I have no more to say to him." The touch of your eyes puts me in mind of him to turn away."

"Do you think so?" he asked; "you will shoot yourself, I suppose?"

"To the last that I have to stay with him, and stick to the last that I have no more to say to him."

"Have I rights?" I cried: "how can you take from me a friendship I have never forfeited? The sincerest proof of which I have, just given. I never wanted you to love me, and I won't have it. I won't give you up. I hate people to love me. Why could you not be nice, and fond of me, as Bright Hale is, and say so?"

THE LITTLE ROSE OF SHANE.

I saw a little rose,
As I went down the lane,
Now, as I go, I said I'll walk,
Till I come back again—
To-morrow, or perhaps some day,
The rain may come, the rain
May open out the bad upturn,
And I will come my and the rain,
The sweet white rose of Shane.
My rose, white rose of Shane.

Two more I went back,
And needed not the rain,
That shimmered in the white, white sun,
As I went back again.
It was a bright, sweet sun,
The sweetest, tiniest rain;
Yet I but heard the whispering,
From up the glade where I left—
"Ah, me!" some one had away
My rose, white rose of Shane.

Some Causes of Deafness.

Dr. Francis Downing, in a paper which he read at a recent meeting of the Cincinnati Academy of Medicine, stated that "between the ages of 10 and 40 at least one person in three is subject to partial deafness. The great majority of cases of impaired hearing date from childhood, and the disease at least five-fifths of the cases of impaired hearing are hereditary, and are largely owing to a too close consanguinity of the parents. Deafness is more prevalent among males than among females, owing to the fact that the male is more liable to the disease of climate. There is much more deafness in America than in Europe, and this is due to a more general use of scientific instruments, such as telephones, where one ear is used to the exclusion of the other."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Getting Information in Samaria.

I am free to confess that I did not meet the proverbial good Samaritan as I journeyed through this much favored country. If one meets a tiller of the soil he will suffice as far as the narrow path will allow, and scowlingly watch the traveler's approach. The offer of a piaster will bring him to a standstill.

"How far is it to Nain?"

"God knows," comes the fervent answer.

"How long will it take to go there?"

"As long as God pleases," he answers, with a shrug of his shoulders and a pull at his pipe.

"Shall I reach there by noon?"

"If God permits."

"But may I hope to make the distance in an hour?"

"As God may direct," he answers, walking away.

"Is Nain distant, or is it very near?"

"There," he answers, moving his finger through a wide arc. "If one extracts a more neighborly spirit from this from a Samaritan he must have the mysterious power of prophecy."

"This Man Seeks the One."

A letter, bearing the postmark of a leading city in Tennessee, was received at the office of the secretary of state, in Hartford. There was nothing remarkable about the letter itself; it related merely to a business matter. The curious thing about it was the letter head, which bore in large type the name of the writer, with these words: "Candidate for county court clerk, August, 1890," while in one corner was printed: "The office is very valuable and responsible. I believe that I am competent to fill it. I know that the income from it would make me comfortable the remainder of my life. My work keeps me closely confined to the top. I will see you before election time. To the people among whom I was born among, and to those who have lived, and whose interests are mine, I appeal for assistance in this race. Very truly," etc. Even the return stamp on the envelope bore the legend: "Candidate for county court clerk" after the sender's name.—New Haven Palladium.

Danger from Milk.

Any animal which gives milk is therefore to a great extent protected from disease. What would otherwise cause sickness has an escape valve through the milk secretion. The mere statement of this fact ought to be the necessity of giving milk cows pure water. The unhealthfulness of milk in summer, from which so many children sick and die, is more frequently caused by giving the cows impure water than by anything else.—New Orleans Picayune.

FIRE PROOF STABLES.

Fire proof stables are not uncommon in Germany and are very simple built. Timber like railroads are placed from three to four feet apart, and filled with a mixture of cinders and lime, making it deep enough to protect the timbers. The trap or door to reach the loft is made of sheet iron, filled with the same compound. This kind of fireproofing is very cheap and very effective.

A NUGGET WEIGHING FIFTY POUNDS.

A gold nugget, weighing fifty pounds, has been found in the Tete Saunders mine in the Uwharrie valley, Montgomery county, N. C., which was discovered at a depth of about 16 feet from the surface. The nugget is 4 inches in length, 6 inches in width and 3 inches in thickness, and is the second largest nugget ever found.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

PEDESTRIANISM.

Mrs. C.—Just think of it. Poor Mrs. Blank has died, and her young child is not able to walk.

Mrs. D.—Not able to walk! I dare say that the disconsolate widow will make it an excuse for marrying again that the child needs a step-mother right off.—Texas Siftings.

NOT ATTEMPT A NEW DEPARTURE.

"Yes, sir," said the barber, when he had finished flaying the stranger alive, "competition kills us all! There's no money in this stand, and I've just about concluded to open a butcher shop!"

"And will you close this one?" the victim gasped feebly.—Boston Times.

FROM OCEAN TO OCEAN.

The Editor of the Tribune.

As you wished me to give you some notes concerning my second trip across the continent, I will give you some which I think will interest your readers in my hurried trip.

Leaving Toronto on the 11th of April at 11 o'clock, p. m., I found myself packed into a car, which was advertised to leave with the excursion party but on account of a snow slide was unable to get it back in time to take the direct train from Toronto. Finding a car which was allotted to me with another occupant also I quietly bought his interest out and from that time until Winnipeg was reached I had splendid sleeping accommodation. Let me tell you here, that the man in charge of the car which I occupied was in charge of a first class porter who attended to the berths and did every thing he could to make the passengers in his car comfortable and at ease.

The North Bay train, which we were delayed there for thirty minutes by the through train from Montreal for the Pacific Coast being that late. The run from Toronto to North Bay is 1,100 miles and I believe you are all aware that the railroad velocities now are about 40 miles per hour.

As far as possible I have delayed about forty minutes by a half slide near Jack Fish Bay. All the towns or rather villages, I should say, are built of logs of different sizes and are when a large lumbering trade comes to their size.

At the head of the lake is a small town called Misasaahie, has a very large export trade in furs being the shipping point for all furs from the far north as the water flowing north is the only outlet for the furs.

A London despatch announces that Lord

Chief Justice Coleridge is ill.

The situation at Liverpool, La, is said to be disturbed owing to the floods.

The authorities of Edinburgh will confer the freedom of that city on H. M. Stanley.

The U. S. Supreme Court has refused a writ of habeas corpus in the Kemmerer case.

The Moravian and Silesian strikers are on strike, and the strikers resuming work on the old terms.

The Belgian Government will give a credit of four million francs for a sea canal to Brussels.

The New York carpenters have practically gained a complete victory in the eight hour movement.

General Boulanger's friends have resolved to burn the statue of their leader and continue the struggle.

The British steamer Richmond has foundered near the eastern coast of the Argentine Republic.

The Spanish government will introduce a bill in the Cortes for improving the condition of the workingmen.

Mr. Parsons' friends are said to be indi cating that he is in a state of health in the House of Commons.

In the Dominion supplementary estimates appear the sums of $9,000 for Belleville harbor, and $9,200 for Trenton public buildings.

McIntyre who assaulted a school teacher at Merrickville not only served a term in jail but had to pay $123 costs.

It does not pay to attack a teacher.

Dominion Piano and Organ Co. to establish their works there.

Newark, N. J., has had three days of rain and low water, the flooded.

The Spanish militia are collapsing except in Valencia and Valencia.

The carpenter's strike at Chicago has been settled at eight hours a day, 35 cents an hour, to August 1, and 37½ cents thereafter.

Several vessels were wrecked.

Mr. Levi Brainer, a farmer, 90 years old, living near the village of Rosedene, Monck-ton, was gone by a bull a few days ago while watering his cattle and has since been missed. The same writer credits his "best friend in Canada" with the prophecy that at the present rate, there will not be a winter in India before the plains in fifteen years. The question is, is it true?

The Indians appear even less fitted to meet the new conditions caused by the advent of the white man than the tribes of the east. All that devoted missionaries and all their efforts to convert the government have failed to move the Indian cultivators of the soil. They readily imitate the worst vices of white men, but seem incapable of imitating their virtues. The Indian will never amount to anything in this country until the present system by which he is treated as a ward and a child is abolished.

FARM, FIELD AND GARDEN.

SUBJECTS OF PRACTICAL IMPORT- ANCE TO AGRICULTURISTS.

Timely Hints Concerning the Management of Poultry—The Treatment of Frozen Eggs—How to Make the Birds Pay the Rent of Their Roosts.

The growing of poultry has come to be an occupation of more or less importance to the dwellers, not only in country places, but in suburban towns as well. Amateurs in this business, as all others, make unavoidable mistakes through lack of experience. Following are a few suggestions gleaned from American Poultry Yard that will be found helpful.

Eggs for sitting should be from healthy, adult birds, not related. Never breed from late turkeys, if it is possible to get better. Never breed from yearling turkeys, if you can get 2-year-olds.

In winter, especially, it is desirable to have plenty of chaff scattered in the houses for the fowls to scratch about and pick over, for otherwise they will have nothing to do but eat their meals at regular intervals, and would spend the intervening time in roosting around or sleepily sitting on their roosting benches.

No matter how careful we may be, shall occasionally find eggs frozen in the nest. These eggs are, of course, unfit for sitting or marketing, but with a little care can be preserved and made useful for culinary purposes. The only precaution needed is to keep them frozen till they are to be used. To prepare for use, pour boiling water over them, and allow them to cool in a warm room. Then use them at once.

Poultry will not pay the rent of their roosts in winter, unless they have clean, warm and light quarters. These "modern improvements" provided, however, and a plenty and variety of food—corn, barley, oats, meat scraps, moderately seasoned with warming condiments, and a dessert of ground oyster shells, and a choice selection of gravel set on their table daily, and you may reasonably expect the rent to be regularly deposited in the boxes therefore provided.

Experiments show that the best mode of killing fowls is to cut the head off with as little of the neck bone as possible, then, as soon as scalped and picked, cut off as much of the protruding bone as will enable you to draw the skin down over the end of it and tie tightly with twine.

Best Varieties of Grapes.

At a meeting of an Ohio horticultural society L. B. Pierce said that, although there are many varieties of grapes today, there are few that equal the Catawba and Isabella. The first of American improved grapes, and, though the Isabella was not in the first rank, it was by long odds the best cooking or canning grape we had. Mr. Dean took from his collection a full ripe bunch of each of Catawba and Isabella as a sample of the old time grapes and passed them around to be tasted. Mr. Stewart formerly raised the Isabella successfully, but in recent years it did not bear as at first. Mr. Doolittle stoutly maintained that neither the Catawba nor Isabella ripened their fruit on the cold clay soils of Streetsborough, and that he did not see an edible grape until the Concord was introduced about twenty years ago.

What to Avoid in Swine Breeding. Perhaps, of all things in connection with swine breeding there is none which is more necessary to avoid than that of in breeding. It is a question which has for ages been discussed, both by those who are opposed to it and those who had been compelled to resort to it in order to produce the ideal type which they had in view. In these days of so many different strains of blood, together with so many family types, we do not believe it is necessary either to cross parent with offspring or even the males and females of that offspring together. To one of knowledge and judgment it is not difficult to determine the best animal to mate with the extra trouble and expense which is likely given him to find and purchase it can in no way be compared with the trouble and loss which is certain to ensue from the very pernicious habit of in breeding.

Grapes on House Walls.

F. H. Valentine very sensibly advised that grapes be planted on the south side of the building and trained evenly over the wall. This is an excellent way to cover an unsightly barn or old building of any kind. There is no expense for trellis, and grapes will thrive finely, as they get the full benefit of the sun.

They may be planted under a pavilion, stones being removed for the purpose, and then replaced. In a western city, a few years ago, a merchant showed a small area in the rear of his store which he had filled with vines, training them up to the high brick walls, and he said that he had bushels of grapes every year.

The Color of Horses.

"We have never been very positive about the color of horses having much to do with their usefulness, speed and endurance," asserts the editor of Standard Farm. A test has lately been made in France to determine whether color had anything to do with horse characteristics. It was demonstrated that it had not. Pedigree, feed and early training had all to do with it, say the French experts, and color nothing whatever. Among the breeders of trotters, it used to be said that a white legged horse was not worth the raising, and so it passed current until Dexter with his white stockings above his knees paralyzed the betting men and the old fogies who knew that three white legs could never win.

It is claimed that one acre in California will produce more grapes than three acres in Spain. California raisins are threatening to invade Europe.

CURING HONEY.

How to Cure It in the Comb, After Extracting and in Storage.

There are three ways by which honey is cured, namely: In the comb, soon after extracting and in storage.

First, as regards the curing of honey in the comb, we might ask this question: "Will a long storage of time in the comb improve it?" Certainly not, by any means, for keeping becomes impure and dirty, which in time will, to a more or less extent, penetrate the honey and give it a dark tint.

Second, the curing after extracting is to leave the honey in open vessels, not entirely excluding the air, but especially protecting it from the dust and light.

Third, the process of curing in storage is to keep the honey in closed vessels, and is something like a limited vinous fermentation, or rather the development of a milic ether—a process of purification. For after such storage for a month or two the honey will wonderfully improve in its crystal appearance. By this method the honey must be kept perfectly excluded from atmospheric air, cautions American Bee Journal, authority to the above.

Curing Butter.

The same process of churning is required to make butter from sweet milk as from sour cream. The butter fat in milk is contained in little globules, that have to be broken by agitation, that the butter they contain is released and can be gathered in a mass by itself. By setting the milk the portion containing the butter fat is broken up into cream and thus only a comparatively small portion of the whole milk need be subjected to churning. It is sometimes claimed that churning the whole milk will give a slightly larger proportion of butter, but where the cream has been properly raised the difference, if any, is not enough to compensate for the additional labor in churning so large a mass of milk for a small yield of butter. To make the same amount of butter would require a churn of about ten times the capacity and a proportionate amount of power to churn it from milk as would be necessary for cream, so the churning of milk is more likely to come in general use in butter making.

The butter is released more readily when the cream is churned just as it has grown slightly sour and the fat globules have been exposed for a time to the action of the atmosphere at a temperature of from 60 to 65 degrees.

Salt for Dairy Cattle.

Professor Robinson says that dairy cattle should have access to salt every day, and salt should be added to all their stable feed daily. A series of experiments have been carried on the wheats and salt for cattle, and it is found that each week they will yield from 144 to 171 percent less milk, and that of an inferior quality. Such milk will on the average sour in twenty-four hours less time than milk drawn from the same or similar cows receiving salt; all other conditions of treatment being equal.

The Forest Area of the Country.

By separating the states into groups, the six New England states are credited with a forest area of 19,193,000 acres; the four middle states with 17,630,000; the fourteen southern states, including Maryland and leaving out Missouri, with 232,900,000; the nine western states with 80,450,000; the Pacific states, 52,630,000; and the gulf states, 14,63,000,000. It will then be seen that of the entire 405,645,800 acres of forest included in this estimate, the fourteen southern states possess fully one-half.

Cotton Seed Meal for Poultry.

American agriculturalists advise, if you can't get meat for your fowls, to buy them cotton seed meal. If fed daily, one pint to a mess of soft food for 200 hens is sufficient. Milk is also an excellent substitute for meat, and, in fact, is considered preferable by some poultry keepers. No matter how well balanced their ration may be, change it often. A variety of food gives zest to the appetite and stimulates digestion.

Cotton Seed from Agricultural Exchanges.

Most assuredly nucleus colonies will raise queens, if you make them queenless during the warm months or when bees can fly. It is better to have the cells reared in full colonies, then give the hatched queens to nuclei, to be fertilized, according to Gleamings in Bee Culture, Southern Cultivator says: "Any kind that will produce corn will produce oats. Oats require a slightly ammoniated fertilizer; hence cotton seed or cotton seed meal is the best home fertilizer that can be used. But a mixture of cotton seed meal and acid phosphate—equal parts—and some soil, potash, in some form, will give better results."

Bee Journal says: "The spreading of the broad frames for winter is an old theory, but one that will hard pay for the trouble. The advantage (if there is any) is very slight, while the disadvantages are many."

Field and Farm says: "We find that a pig which is fed much roughage, and a kind of raw pumpkin as food, and cooked with potatoes they are much relished. When cooked this way it is well to add a little ship soap or bran to a better balanced ration."

New England Farmer reports that Mr. Philbrick, of Tilton, N. H., finds his cattle cost him $240 per ton in the silo, and that three tons are equal in value to one ton of hay. Mr. Haven, of Whitefield, estimates the cost of his at $1.25 per ton, labor cost, and finds forty pounds equal to nineteen pounds of hay.

No bird with blood in its plumage should ever be permitted to run with the flock, for the reason that, attracted by the blood, the other fowls will soon acquire the evil of feather eating.

Pick all white birds and sell their feathers separately, as when their feathers sell for twenty-eight cents a pound, while colored feathers bring only six to eight cents a pound. This makes a great difference, as the feathers alone will pay dressing expenses, if they be white ones.

FARM, FIELD AND GARDEN.

INTERESTING ITEMS FOR THE PEA- RUSAL OF THE FARMERS.

Fowls for Profit and Fowls for Ornament. All About the Brown Leghorns and Silver Duckwing Game—Important Points in the Cultivation of Oats.

Brown Leghorns are included among the profitable fowls by everybody who is acquainted with the breed. Southern Cultivator classifies them at the head of the list of poultry that pays. The birds from four to seven pounds each and thrive best with large white ear lobes white, white red and pectoral, long and high in single comb cock, but lopping to one side in the hen. The chicks mature early, and a cross on a common flock is desirable where birds are required for the table. By crossing a brown Leghorn cock with a Partridge Cochin hen, the best layer, with medium size, is obtained.

If care is used in breeding the kind of fowls that are to be raised, there would be more satisfactory results; but the fact is not one in a hundred gives proper attention to this matter. Hundreds of chicks may be hatched, and when they have attained the growth of three or four months the poultryman selects from among the number those which are the most promising. Such pullets may answer the purposes desired, but if a certain number of hens were chosen as the parents of the future layers, and mated with a cockerel possessing the characteristics desired for a pure cross, there would be more eggs secured and a more choice lot of market chicks raised.

Coming to the ornamental birds, no fowls can be prettier than a nearly pure colored silver duckwing. Not only is the cock strikingly beautiful, but the hen, in her coat of neat, light gray, is very pleasing to the eye. The modern silver duckwing hen, when well bred, will reproduce her color in her pallets accurately that it is often difficult to distinguish one from the other. If gold and black breasted red blood is kept out, according to the authority quoted, Silver can be made to breed true as any other color, and colored reds if properly colored birds are secured to start with.

A well-colored silver cock should have no black or even dark stripes in hackle, though at the extreme lower part of the hackle feathers show a slight streak in center that should not condemn an otherwise well colored cock. If this slight marking is not too dark and distinct, and does not extend to any considerable distance up the hackle, it is not considered dangerous in a breeding male if the general appearance of neck is clear. Yet an absolutely pure feather is preferable. A perfectly black breast and under parts should be required in a breeding cock, there is a tendency to show white specks if encouraged on the lead. Sometimes a cockerel with slight streaks in lower hackle will show perfectly clear neck the next year and after.

Some breeders have found that a cockerel with solid black breast and under parts will show specks in breast when two years old. It is quite important to have the back and saddle feathers even and free from spots or blotches of black or rusty feathers. The saddle should be as free from stripes as possible. Never use golden males or those at all brassy on shoulder, and select a cockas free from yellowish or creamy tinge as you can. Select the narrowest and closest feather, and allow no dirty colored or soft feathered males to be kept for breeders.

Butchering on the Farm.

Butchering on the farm, which is usually at its height before the holidays, has in many sections been deferred beyond the usual period on account of the unprecedently moist and warm weather. This is a mistake, as the animal when killed should be the same to kill him in dry, frosty weather, when they have hung out over night and become thoroughly cooled through. Pork is often lost from the effects of unfavorable weather at killing time, such as we have been experiencing for weeks, than from improper salting afterwards.

It is far better to keep hogs already fat enough to kill until the atmosphere is exactly right to kill them in warm, muggy weather. Fat hogs cool slowly, and unless the animal heat is entirely gone before the meat is packed away there is greater danger of its spoiling. After hogs are killed, if the weather improves rapidly in the morning and the carcasses cannot be kept cooling, hang them for a cool change to come, when heat will be up and salted with a soft and slippery condition, far more than the usual case will be required to save the meat. On the other hand, a retention of animal heat sufficient to work injury may be occasioned by allowing the newly dressed hogs to hang in an atmosphere so cold that the outside will be frozen hard before the internal heat has been expelled.

A Good Bear Harvester. Quite a good bear harvester, according to Country Gentleman, may be made by removing the mold board from a plow and fastening the handles to land side; then drill two holes through the point and bolt on a steel blade, well sharpened, about fifteen inches longer than the point. The blade is to be made by any blacksmith. One horse is good enough to longhew the clevis that the horse may walk between the rows. A man follows with fork to shake earth and pitch into piles. The point runs under ground and cuts off roots and stalks.

Sheep on Rough Land. If you have never had a rough broken farm and small capital, you can hardly do better to secure a few good sheep. These will eat the weeds and other trash and gather, under good management, a large flock in a short time—an investment that will pay interest at shearing time at the rate of 100 percent, and dividends from each lamb, besides leaving the pasture lot fertilized in the best possible manner for a crop of winter wheat.

NOTES.

All subscribers to THE TRIBUNE should be by this time that payment is in advance, and we hope, that all who have not yet paid for this year's subscription will call and settle at an early date. We are making out bills to those who have not when previous payments will be cheerfully and promptly made. All the newspapers of the country have adopted this policy.

Successful Lumbermen.

Messrs. W. W. Parker and Murray Deans of the lumbering operations in Hastings, notwithstanding unfavorable weather. They will start a portable mill next week to cut 1,500 logs which they have on hand and will be in full operation in a week.

They have shipped the greater part of their railway ties and telegraph posts to the Rathbun Company at Deseronto. They have given employment during the winter to a large force of men.

A Seaworthy Master.

Mr. John Dalton, a seafaring man, is to be a factor in the lumbering operations in Hastings. He is a man who has had a good deal of experience in the timber business.

It is to be a Master.

If you have no business of your own, don't loaf around the place of another. Nothing gives a business man a poorer opinion of a place than to see half a dozen losers sitting or lounging around outside of the business place. The proprietor may be too polite or forbearing to order you away, but inwardly he will wish you to the bottom of the sea.

If he hires hands he expects them to work in business hours and a man who sits around a place of business after hour talking to his workmen is never a welcome visitor to the proprietor. In this busy world there is work enough for all, and the man or boy who is content to sit around and loaf had better do off and die.

The Sunken Dredge.

The dredge which went down last week in a hundred feet of water near Bath was valued at $15,000. She has only been rebuilt and has an electric light plant put on her which added considerably to her value. It will be almost a total loss to Mr. Munson, who has invested $10,000 in whatever.

It was not three minutes after the leak was discovered before the dredge was submerged in water. Most of the belongings of the men were on board and dashed ashore in their trucks as they sustained very little damage.

Mr. Munson, the bridge contractor at Belleville will do in view of the loss of the dredge, which had a considerable amount of work yet to do. Mr. Munson will send a diver down to see what can be raised.

The Alexandria on a Rock.

The steamer Alexandria which left Kingston Monday night went ashore on a rock just before the light house at Gananoque. She will have to be lightened before an attempt is made to get her off. The rock she ran on is the only one in that part of the river mentioned. Capt. Smith engaged the services of St. Hirant of Gananoque. The steamer ran alongside of her and went to Gananoque. The steamer is in a bad condition being about a foot and a half off the rock.

She was going at full speed when she struck. Her cargo is a heavy load of bread.

We learn that the Alexandria was pulled off. She had several planks smashed and three frames are gone. She has been brought to Picton, where she will be hauled up for repairs.

-WE EXPECT TO OPEN-

By Saturday some of the biggest bargains ever seen in Canada. We have bought a lot of Shirts, Cottonades, Towels, Dress Goods, Linings, Ginghams, Gloves, etc., from the estate of a large wholesale house lately failed, and will give you the benefit of our bargains. All we ask is a fair percentage of commission for handling them, the price to you will be less than the regular wholesale sale prices, and at least than you can buy them for anywhere else.

TRUE STORY OF A WALL STREET HERO
BY HENRY CLEWS.

[Copyrighted. All rights reserved.]

CHAPTER I.
AN EARLY PASSION.

Annie Stockwell's blue eyes looked straight at him.

Three years ago Daniel Hardy was employed as a teamster for a saw mill in Posket, Vt. Born on a farm, his boyhood came to an early end, for stubborn nature yields her harvests in the Green Mountain state only after a severe struggle, and even infantile hands are required for the work. Little knowledge had he of such things as a boy, but the few years spent at the district school when he was just big enough to be in his mother's way, and not strong enough to be of service, had resulted in his acquiring a passable knowledge of the alphabet and various forms of mischief, and during his teens an occasional term at the winter session had added to his learning the rudiments of "flickering" and a certain ability to misspell most words of two syllables and many of one.

It was while he was a mere child that the passion of his life took root in him. A week after his twelfth birthday the best, his most utterly helpless when Annie Stockwell's blue eyes looked straight into his own, they gazed each other at school during the long, hot summer months, when they dozed over their primers instead of playing in the open air. Little Dan looked longer at the bench where Annie sat than at his book; but when she turned toward him up went his soul and daydreams awoke before his face, and his blood shone through his sunburnt cheeks. Often times Annie found a big red apple or a yellow pear in her desk, but Dan never told who put it there, and when she tried to smile her appreciation across the school room, for she knew well enough, he looked steadfastly at the blackboard.

Scattered ran along for years. When Daniel's school days were over he saw Annie at "meetin'" and at sewing circles and tea parties, and walked home with her from all such gatherings as came to an end after dark. He even went to spelling bees in the old school house and stood up to be regularly doored by the first word put to him in order that he might sit proudly by and watch the contestants drop into their seats, one after another, until Annie should be left alone the victor.

At last one day came when Mr. Stockwell, having slowly awakened to a recognition of his daughter's superior talents, consented to send her to a boarding school. In those relations existed between Daniel and Annie, at the time of her departure it is difficult to determine. They may have talked of marriage, but it is more probable that, having grown up side by side, they left the future to take care of itself, each content with a tacit acknowledgement of trust, as there certainly was of affection, in the other. It was generally believed in Posket that they were engaged.

Daniel was at the postoffice when Annie took the stage to go away. They merely said "good-by" to each other, but when the dust of wheels and horses' hoofs had obscured the clumsy vehicle in the distance, and Daniel still stood at it, the postmaster said, with that kindly impertinence found unguessed in the country, and thinly cloaked by euphemistic phrases in the city:

"Well, Dan'l, I suppose you 'n Annie's'll git married soon's she's done schoolin'?"

Daniel started, and his brown cheeks reddened as of old. He thrust his hands deep into his pockets, and, turning with a sullen scowl, replied:

"You go on, Mr. Sparks!"

Then he walked alone away.

At this time Daniel Hardy was 20 years old, a grown man, whose stalwart frame was yet angular and unwieldy by lack of full maturity. He was strong enough, heaven knows, for any kind of physical labor, and he never lacked for a job. That stern patience that is cultivated by New England farming was characteristic of him, and with it was a steadfastness of purpose that even his neighbors recognized. He never admitted anybody to his confidence, and his neighbors had no intimation in this respect.

Annie was at school three years. At long intervals she visited Posket, and these were seasons of — I was about to say, unalloyed bliss for Daniel. The phrase would be strictly true of the first vacation. Boarding school life was so new to her that it had not affected her thought or her demeanor as yet, and her talk to Daniel was of nothing but the strange scenes and people and her delight at seeing her old home.

By the end of another year, however, a change was apparent to all, not in her relations to her lover, but in her appearance, her carriage and her speech. Everybody, except Daniel, regarded it as an improvement; he hardly knew whether he liked it or not.

There were keener observers in Posket than Daniel Hardy. The good women of the village were quick to discern the change and to understand them. One day a neighbor who called at the Stockwells' discovered Annie, with her sleeves rolled up, scrubbing milk pans in the kitchen.

"I don't 'spect, Annie," said this neighbor, "that you'll go into the kitchen after your edication's finished; an' then what'll Dan'l Hardy do for his break-fa'?"

Annie blushed and gave her pan an extra vigorous rub. Then she tossed her head, and answered:

"I don't mean that any man who is to be my husband shall have to get a hired girl."

Then she laughed and avoided further remarks on the subject by talking of cat and mouse. The neighbor went away highly pleased, and twenty-four hours had not passed before the episode, with various pleasant additions, had been narrated to Daniel Hardy. The next evening he called at her house.

"Howdy, Dan'l, glad to see ye," said Squire Stockwell, as Daniel entered the "settin' room." Mrs. Stockwell was in the room, and when Annie rose and gave him her hand in homely country fashion and wished him good evening, Daniel sat on the edge of the chair and began to twirl his hat.

"Let me take your hat, Dan'l," said Annie, and the lover wished she had left it with him, for he knew not what to do with his hands.

"I suppose you're goin' teamin' again for the sawmill next fall," said Squire Stockwell.

"Yes, squire," responded Daniel.

"Have your folks heard how Mis' Bascomb's gittin' on?" inquired Mrs. Stockwell.

"Yes, marm, she's pickin' up," replied Daniel.

"I've be'n lookin' for'ard to this, Annie, ever since you went to school three years ago. I made up my mind then that when you come home I would have money enough laid by to set up house-keepin'."

"Dan'l, Daniel don't," interrupted Annie, and she reached impulsively forward and took one of his great hands in both of hers. "Don't let us talk of it now, please."

"But I done it," he persisted; "they're money in the bank, an' I've got a chance to buy the old Ransum place, an' by a little fixin' it'll do just rite till we car build a new house onto it. The sile jist a good's good in the country, 'n if you liked it better, I presume the bank would let me have money enough to build to oonit. Everything's ready jest 's soon as 'n it shall be jes' what you want it, 'n I don't perose to hurry you neither, 't's a good's time I've be'n awaitin'."

"You are so good," Daniel, and Annie was almost crying; "but please don't speak of it now, wait a few days, do?"

She bent her head down and kissed the brawny, toll-worn hand she held, and kept her face there to conceal the tears that ran over it.

After a strange pause, "All right," said Daniel; "all right, Annie, jist you say."

She raised her head, dashed away the tears and smiled, and, without knowing exactly how or why, Daniel left the house.

Two weeks passed, during which Daniel held his peace in painful wonderment, while sundry disquieting rumors gained currency in the village. They did not reach Daniel's ears at once, for few people cared to intrude upon him, but it was said by so and so that one of Annie's classmates had a handsome, wealthy brother who had visited his sister many times through the past school year and who had been very attentive to her. The Postel beauty among the gathering features.

The first intimation that Daniel received that others than himself were sensible of some change in his relations to Annie came from our friend Postmaster Sparks. The usual concourse of villagers was idling in the store one evening waiting for the stage to bring in the mail. Daniel was there, silent and somber.

"Got a touch of malady, Dan'l?" asked the postmaster; "you don't seem to be lookin' 's smart's usual."

"I'm so to be settin' up, Mr. Sparks," responded Daniel, evasively.

"Yaa's, drawled Mr. Sparks; "they's several sicknesses don't confine a man to his bed, you know?"

As Daniel made no reply, the kind-hearted postmaster continued:

"You're a younger man th'n I am, Dan'l, but you're bound to be bound to most boys of your age 'n you'd ought to have seen that you can't spec too much in afeers of the heart, Hay, Daniel?"

Daniel rose from the cracker barrel on which he had been sitting.

"Mr. Sparks," he said slowly, and all the villagers listened intently; "you're an older man th'n I be, 'n you'd ought to have learnt to meddle with nobody's business that don't concern yourn. Mebbe, though, bein' postmaster, you can't help it."

It was a sally pleased the listeners that one did. Sparks was notorious, even in rustic Posket, for his persistence in learning about the correspondence that passed through his hands.

"They's no sense in gittin' excited, Dan'l Hardy," he said, "an' they's no call for you to be sassy to a man's went to school with your father. Everybody in Posket 'n' fer miles around knows that she's been your' courting Squire Stockwell's daughter, the Lord knows how long, 'n' be'n engaged to her for goin' on three, 'n' praps more; you've 'n much's ad'mittin' to yourself, An' all I've got to say is, it's a long lane that aint got no turnin'."

Daniel's heavy jaws were shut hard together, and down went his clinched fists into his pockets. He stood still for a moment, and none of his neighbors ventured to address him. Then he left the store without waiting for the stage and went home.

It did not need that gossip should inform Daniel of the rumors concerning Annie. He never had blushed so red, never had his heart so sorely ached as when she met Daniel for the first time. There was even a touch of agitation in her tones, and her eyes restlessly sought some other object than her lover's face. She withdrew her hand from Daniel's on the register of the village tavern, and asked the landlord about the fishing in the neighborhood. From this inquiry to questions about people and to Squire Stockwell's standing in the community of course. For some reason that was entirely beyond his comprehension she accompanied her mother from the "settin' room" to the open window, where any chance passerby might plainly see her.

"Be you comin'?" asked Daniel, following.

"Why, no," she answered, her eyes cast down, "I suppose not, Daniel," and the trouble, wistful expression! Daniel saw but the sweetest, fairest face in the known world.

"Annie," he said, and he went to her side, "you ain't going to leave Posket again, be you?"

She turned nervously away and stood in front of the open window, where any chance passerby might plainly see her.

A MESSAGE.

She wasn't on the playground, she wasn't on the lawn. The little house was musing and bedecked, as we had been in the garden, we peeped about to see if sleeping under rose tree like she might be. But nothing came in answer to all our anxious calls at length we hastened within the darkening hall.

And so upon the stillness there broke a silver tone—

The darling mate was standing before the telephone as we listened, came stealing down the stairs.

"Hie, Central! Give me heaven. I want to say my prayer."

—Sister Daye in Independent.

THE STRANGE FLUTIST.

Last January, on the fine evening that a light snow carpeted the roofs of Paris, a closed carriage rolled along the boulevard, spinning like a zebra. It was so loaded with trunks that you would have thought a actress was setting out on a journey.

Within, a man of a certain age, tall and fat, one of those who travel a trifles, and who think their final day of reckoning is near when they have a cold in the head. This one imagined he had weak lungs. So at the approach of winter he had bunched himself with furs and fled to Nîmes.

He was a bachelor; although he could have married at any time, for he had 100,000 francs in stocks, and therefore suited many young ladies, had been unwilling to dispose of his right hand. Next to himself, the man he had bested in the race for the girl's heart, was his cook.

No one took better care of No. 1. Under no circumstances would he have disturbed himself to do a favor. He would not have left it to some other in the street, for it would have been necessary to unbuckle his overcoat to take out his purse.

He was indeed the most extravagant crank to be with. His most insignificant acts were on system; he slept, rose, awoke and took exercise with his watch in hand.

Many a man's stories he had heard.

For instance, he was so nervous, so irritable, that he detected the songsters in the courtyards. The porter had to drive them away with the broom. To persons who persisted in singing in the street, he quickly threw a handkerchief over their mouths.

He was a man, Kissimeeconick, fat, M. Jaine—an Australian nightingale. These birds learn aair perfectly and in the night sing the neighbors.

Some time ago, for it was folly to get along with a man, he said.

"I propose to the lady to sell it to me. Go as high as 500 francs, that I may have the satisfaction of winging its neck."

"Well, M. Jaine, I will speak to her this evening."

M. Jaine complied with his promise, but Kissimeeconick sent him a note.

"Five hundred francs," she cried. "I think much of it as a Chapman of his pigtails."

"I say that fellow that I will not sell my bird for $500, for it is a souvenir of my hunting."

The word "fellow" teachéd M. Jaine's sensitivity; he grew red in the face and threatened retaliation.

As Mme. Kissimeeconick was accustomed to sleep from 2 to 5 o'clock in the afternoon he would wake a violin, 200 times in succession, the first four measures of "Returning from the Review."

Unfortunately for his plan Mme. Kissimeeconick was deaf of one ear. She lay on the ear and slept with the serenity of a mother.

In the evening, still in a perspiration, delighted with having silenced the bird, if not the mistress, he promised himself a fine sleep.

But bark! Suddenly in the silence, crack!

The neighbors had to hold their sides, for there are people who cannot help laughing.

At Nîmes he always put up at the great United States hotel, where for fifteen years the same magnificient room, well exposed to the sun, was reserved for him. It was there he found one he could afford, and he occupied it until April 2 at noon precisely, the hour at which he set out for Paris.

His name excited mirth. I will not attempt an explanation, but everybody smiled whenever he was introduced. He was known as M. Jaine.

Now M. Jaine arrived at Nîmes the day after his arrival at Paris, at 6 o'clock in the evening. He partook of an excellent dinner—a beauhebille aux langoustes, a filet marin, a quail, asparagus, and a bottle of Chateau de Ross. With this he hoped not to die with hunger. Then, after having smoked a good cigar to settle his coffee and champagne, he retired to rest.

It was 9 o'clock when he encountered himself in bed. He extinguished the light, and, stretching himself out, anticipated sleep like a dormouse.

But surely had he dropped into a doze when a flute was heard in the next apartment playing the air from Faust:

"Let, oh, let me gaze upon thy face!"

The flute was sweet and silvery, so the first impression was charming; but the flute cut short the melody of the fourth measure and repeated it several times, then rested for five minutes and resumed in like manner, stopping at the same point.

"What is this, the matter with him?" said M. Jaine to himself.

The other continued without a sign of trouble.

At the fifth rehearsal, as there is nothing so agreeable as not to wear in the end M. Jaine's coat, he was in the end. The flute was silent. Satisfied, he took a potation from his night table and closed his eyes. It was 10 o'clock. The hotel was almost empty, the greater part of the guests not having yet come in. Suddenly the silence was broken by the flute.

"Let, oh, let me gaze upon thy face!"

"Whoa! He is getting to be a nuisance. If this is for an extra attraction I will dispense with it."

He tapped loudly and cried out:

"Will you stop? If you don't I'll gaze upon you for a month!"

When M. Jaine got angry he forgot the dictates of politeness. There was silence again, and he began to get drowsy.

Suddenly:

"Let, oh, let me gaze upon thy face!"

"Fie! The man the chambermaid!

"Who is this? Is this of a flutist whom I have for a neighbor?" he asked.

"A flutist?" she exclaimed, with a vacant air. "Why, M. Jaine, you are dreaming. The chime is empty."

M. Jaine did not reply. The surprise disclosed itself that perhaps he was beginning to have delusions. Besides, so long as the chambermaid was at hand the flutist could not be heard. But surely was she gone crack!

"Let, oh, let me gaze upon thy face!"

And so on about once a minute. M. Jaine floundered about and sank under the bed coverings exhausted.

At 11 o'clock he heard some one enter. Under the partition door he saw a garment light. He heard the rustling of garments and preparations for bed. After a short quiet repose, and he slept, as usual, until the next morning.

On this second day, after having taken a walk on the Promenade Des Anglais for a sun bath, passed a little time at the club and dined composedly, he went up to retire at 10 o'clock.

He commenced undressing. Suddenly—just so—have you it:

"Let, oh, let me gaze upon thy face!"

forgetting his grotesque appearance in his negligee, half undressed, he rushed down to complain to the master of the house.

"M. Fauchon, why do you furnish lodgings to musical artists in a house which I thought so commendable?"

"Truly, M. Jaine, I do not know what you mean; I beg you to believe that I have means enough for my interests to refuse those people."

"Then you have one without knowing it—just at No. 10, next to the hotel, I mean." "I beg you to believe that M. Jaine, at No. 10 is a most sedate lady, Mme. Kissimeeconick, of the United States, and at No. 6 is Miss White-rose, of London."

"I repeat that there is a flutist at No. 10. Perhaps the lady thrusts him into the wardrobe when any one goes in."

"I beg your pardon again, M. Jaine, Mme.

Kissimeeconick enjoys an irreproachable reputation. In her place would be willing to receive a doubtful compliment. Mme. Kissimeeconick is a mature widow. If she flitted it would be seriously, and as she weighs some 300 pounds it would not be with a flute. She goes to bed early and has the best bodily, and returns at 11 o'clock."

M. Jaine, disconcerted, went back to his room. However, his head was scarcely on the pillow when he gave it up.

"Let, oh, let me gaze upon thy face!"

"Flute again!" exclaimed M. Jaine. He rang for the chambermaid.

"Ask your master to come here."

"M. Fauchon, pray!" said M. Jaine.

M. Fauchon endeavored to hold his breath. Of a sudden two phlebotomists set up a caterwauling on the balcony.

"I am talking to each other," said M. Fauchon.

"I hear them, too," M. Jaine claimed in a patient tone.

"M. Fauchon! The flute will begin again."

"M. Fauchon, pray!"

"Let, oh, let me gaze upon thy face!"

M. Jaine, in agitation, struck against the wall, while M. Fauchon burst into loud laughter.

"I have it, M. Fauchon! I have it. I will present to the lady the results of my pugnacious researches. I have found a way to get rid of the flute."

"I will, M. Jaine, I will speak to her this evening."

M. Fauchon complied with his promise, but Kissimeeconick sent him a note.

"Five hundred francs," she cried. "I think much of it as a Chapman of his pigtails."

"I say that fellow that I will not sell my bird for $500, for it is a souvenir of my hunting."

OUR MISTAKES ABOUT EACH OTHER

Not one man in ten thousand sees who with whom he associates as they really are. If the prayer of Boerens were granted and we could see ourselves as others see us, our self-satisfaction would be all the more erroneous than that now.

The truth is that we regard each other through a variety of lenses, none of which is correct. Passion and prejudice, love and hate, and other personal qualities often cloud our eyes and utterly prevent us from seeing accurately. Many who we deem the porcelain of human clay are mere pot metal, and a still greater number are not even the true appraisal of the virtues and defects of even our closest intimates. If we all saw ourselves as the world sees us, multitudes would despise themselves without sufficient cause, and not a few be puffed up with pride for which there would be no honest foundation.

It is not just or fair to look at character from a standpoint of one's own selection. We are all too apt to regard our own as the best, and yet our full fault is agreeable. We once saw a young man, whose timidity was a standing joke with his companions, leap into the Hudson and save himself from drowning, while his tormentors stood by, laughing.

The merchant may give out answers in his counting room may be a tender husband and father and a kind helper of the desolate and oppressed. On the other hand you may see the same man smile and smile and smile in public, may carry something as hard as the nether millstone in the place where his heart ought to be. Such anomalies are common. There is this contrast, however, between those whose misjudgments of their fellow creatures lead to the really aside mistakes such as mistakes go to their credit in the great account.

On the principle that it is not good to have all your eggs in one basket, we would say plant an orchard. Your grain may rust or be destroyed by the fly or other insects; potatoes often do. Your corn sometimes does not ripen. You are there in the field of work about an orchard. So there is the heaviest part of it comes at a comparatively slack time. There is work, hard and hurried too in ploughing and sowing your wheat land, and in clearing and taking your grain to market. John Croft in Canadian Horticulture.

THE DOCTOR'S TREATMENT.

"My brave little girl—my darling—my

After that I was very ill. The company left me, and Dr. Katesby came every day. He asked if there was anyone belonging to me for whom he could send.

"Only Uncle Jeb," said I. "He hates me because I went on the stage, but if the curtain is going to ring down on me it would only be showing him proper attention to inform him."

I gave my cross old uncle's a check for $500, and a letter telling the doctor not to let me die. "She is a silly child," he wrote, "but her heart is in the right place, except for being set on the stage."

I wept over that letter, and thought it rather nice to be dying.

One day Dr. Katesby brought his mother, and the next thing I knew I was taken to their home to "get well." I got well so slowly that I wondered the doctor did not lose patience. But he didn't. One afternoon he sat by me a long while, telling me of a girl who had jilted him, and who, he thought, had broken his heart forever. I sat up straight in bed and vowed that of all things was the unkindest, most unsatisfactory, cruellest, worst in the world.

We talked a long time, and he seemed to think as I did. In the end we shook hands and he said, "We will be friends. Miss Katie, forever."

"Yes," said I, shaking his hand in both of mine, "and I am awfully grateful to you. Friendship is so nice, and I do want it!" Of a sudden I determined to secure matters, and I looked at him as solemnly as I knew how, and said:

"Promise me sacredly that you will never talk to me except as you are looking now, and never, never kiss me. We shake hands again, and I went on: "We will be just friends always."

"As long as you like," said he.

"Oh, I shall like it always," I answered. "I never go back on a friend.

Friendship is the best thing in the world—the only safe, happy, comfortable thing—isn't it? And we should be very grateful for the happy friendship between us."

He said "yes" and so it was settled.

I got well, I was perfectly happy. The doctor always good to me. He was never too busy to come to my office.

He even let me print pillars and wash out bottles and dust his instruments. Sometimes, when Mrs. Katesby was tired, I used to see to his breakfast, and even when he discovered that I made the toast I was not forbidden. It seemed to me that no one had ever been so kind to me.

At last I was well enough to go to New York for my May engagements. The evening before I was to start I sat up for the doctor. Mrs. Katesby had kissed me and told me to. I went wandering about, touching things that belonged to him. I had a queer feeling in my heart. I had been so happy, and now to go away and perhaps never—heard his key and ran to open the door.

"What, little girl—up?" said he.

"Yes," I answered; "your mother told me to serve your midnight tea. I don't think you should have midnight tea, but I suppose a doctor knows."

"I suppose so," said he, as I helped him take off his coat.

I was so quiet at the table that he asked, "Anything the matter?"

"Only I am going to-morrow, and you wouldn't believe how strange it makes me feel here," and I rubbed my hand over the pain in my side.

"Your heart?" he asked.

"Yes—downright miserable," I answered.

He laughed only softly, but I felt hurt, and all of a sudden I could not see. He must have observed that I was pouring tea into the sugar bowl, for he called me to him. I thought it troubled him to look up. So I knelt down.

"When you go away," he asked, "will you remember we are friends?"

"Yes," said I.

"Forever?"

"Yes," said I again, in a dull voice.

"Tell me, Katie," he continued, laying a hand on each of my shoulders.

"I did treat you as you wished—as I promised?" I nodded, and the tears came up. He looked at me a moment, then said softly, "Friendship is the best thing in the world, the only safe, happy, comfortable thing, isn't it, dear? and we should be very grateful for the happy friendship between us." I nodded so hard that the tears spattered my hands. He stood up quickly. "I am off early to-morrow," and I will say good-by now. Be good in New York. I shall come about the 15th and see you."

He held out his hand. It doffed, of course, just what a friend would do, and then I put first one hand and then the other into it. Then, as he closed his eyes, I bent and kissed it and said: "Good-by. You have been very good to me. Please, don't forget me."

When I got upstairs I lay down on the floor and wept till my head was in a puddle.

Mrs. Katesby wrote to me sometimes after I came away. She was so lonely that she sent for a niece. The doctor liked his cousin very much. I thought about the cousin all day and all night. At last the 14th of the month came. That night I played so well the manager offered me for the next season. The 13th was Sunday. He came. I talked like a magpie and spoke of everything but the cousin. When I was talked out he began. He questioned me closely about the theatre.

"Oh, yes," said I. "There is a man, of course. He told me last night he was going to shoot himself. I said no, he wouldn't—to just take a brandy and soda."

The doctor looked dark. "I will not have you associate with such people," he said, and I thought he tested me.

"What's to be done?" I returned, lightly, adding, "He doesn't bother me now—only when he takes me to speak and leans over the table to say in a husky stage whisper that he loves me. How men will do such things at lunches! It's so annoying when one is hungry. You can't go on brutally eating partridge while a man tells you he has despair in his heart and a loaded pistol in his pocket—can you?"

The doctor was not amused. "Do you care for any of these fellows?" he asked suddenly.

"My life I could not tell the truth. I don't know," I answered. "I asked myself. Then all at once I cried: 'Do you care for your cousin?'"

"Very much," he answered, absently.

Then he asked in a strained way if I thought we could still be friends if either of us married, and in the next breath, informed me that he was going to Europe. My heart had been filling up tighter and tighter. Now it burst. I gave a gasp.

"Are you going to leave me?" I said. "Katie," he answered, feeling his way through the words, "there is nothing else for me to do."

"Don't you care for me at all that you break my heart so?" I cried, pushing my hands hard together; "am I the side of the house that you look at me as if you did not see me? What have I done that you should treat me as if you hated me? I will not have it! I'll go out and drown myself."

"Katie," said he steadily, "remember that you are still entitled to me. A great light flashed before my eyes. I stood up and reached out my hands. "Oh!" I said, "I see how cruel I have been to people for now my own heart breaks. You may hurt me as much as you like. I am no coward. Still I will tell you. I know I made you promise to be my friend and never to love me—I know it—and you have kept your word. You are going to marry your cousin and go to Europe; but before you go I will tell you that I love you. It is right I should have to say it so—and for nothing—for I have always been cruel, and believed no one—but now I know it can be true. Though my heart breaks I am not afraid, and I say it again—I love you—I love you!"

The room went all around, and I began to fall; but a glad cry sounded, and another arms held me up, and my doctor's voice was saying: "My brave little girl—my darling—I love you. You have come to me! and I love you with all my soul, and I have from the first."

There is no more a Katie Tempest, Sourette.

THE END.

Fainting Women Struggling for Bargains.

A small store advertised that it might be well to look out for bargains in a certain dry goods center that afternoon, whereupon the shop which had just got out a certain experience of fainting women at once did up woolen chalices in pieces of thirty-five yards each and directed that these bundles should be sold across the counter at one cent each.

One of the floor walkers, in speaking of the scene after the bargains had been exhausted, said: "The store looked like a battlefield after a preliminary skirmish. In my vicinity there were twenty women, all of whom had fainted from their struggle to secure a part of the allotment of chalices. They were laid out carefully upon the rugs which had been taken from stock for their accommodation, each one with a clerk bending over her administering smelling salts or bathing her head with cologne, working like beavers in order to get their patients around to fit for another round of chalices."

"I suppose that the sacrifices of dress goods cost the store upward of $2,000, but it gained this: For months the women who succeeded in getting what they sought, as well as the unfortunate ones, will not fail to visit the shop regularly every day to take advantage of any other bargains which may be given unannounced. They will, each time they come in, buy something, even if it be only a half dozen buttons, and the profits from these women, who would not, under any other circumstances, enter the place, will return the outlay of the firm many hundred per cent."—New York Times.

FARM, FIELD AND GARDEN.

DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF PROGRESSIVE CULTIVATORS.

Condensed Rules Which, if Followed, Will Lead to Success in the Orchard—Selection of Ground, Choice of Trees, Directions in Pruning and Grafting.

For successful orcharding, Country Gentleman recommends attention to the following rules, which are conveniently classified under different heads, First Selection of ground—Select a good soil, such as will raise good farm crops. Make it mellow at once or with previous mellowing. Hill sides or rocky places are admissible only in case plenty of barn manure can be had for annual top dressing. See that the land has good natural drainage.

Choice of trees—Choose young and vigorous trees, not over two years old from the graft. See that ample roots are secured in digging—enough to stiffen the tree without staking, and give ready growth. Avoid large, overgrown, or stunted trees which have short roots mutilated by digging. Remember that a good supply of roots is more important than straight stems or handsome heads. Procure well proved standard varieties, and no new laid sorts.

Pruning—Prune trees when they are partly dry when harvested, bury them for a week, top and all, in finely pulverized moist soil, to restore them. Before setting out, dig holes broad enough to receive all the roots without bending. Use no manure, except on the surface after setting or in the remote parts of large holes. In setting out, spread the roots out equally on all sides, at their full length, and fill in compactly fine mellow earth. After set, shorten back the long shoots and thin out where too thick, giving a neat, even, rounded shape. Always shorten back before the buds swell and never when partly or wholly in leaf. Keep the ground for several feet around the newly set trees clean and mellow all summer.

After care of the trees—Keep the ground cultivated over the whole surface for six or eight years; after which allow grass to grow only in case a good annual or biennial top dressing of manure may be given. As the roots of growing trees are as long as their height, avoid the mistake of spading or manuring narrow circles around the foot of the stem, but cultivate the whole surface promptly removing all suckers. Clover and sowed grain should never be allowed in young orchards; grass, if kept short, and annually top dressed with manure, is admirable; holly crops, and other trees, do well; and clear culture is the best.

Pruning and grafting—Much pruning is unnecessary, and when performed do but little in any one year; thin the out-side of the head and not the center, and that where too thick, giving a neat, even, rounded shape. Undesirable fruits or those proved unfit to the climate may be changed to good ones by grafting; several grafts spread over the heads will soon form bearing trees. For large trees, divide the grafting through two or three seasons.

Selection of varieties—For use, select good varieties enough to keep up a constant succession from the midsummer kinds through autumn and winter, and of long keepers to last through spring. For market, choose such as bear heavy crops of salable apples, and plant orchards only in such places as they succeed well in and find a ready sale at the most profitable times of year.

The Ripening of Cream.

Henry Stewart thus discusses on the "new invention," so called, of ripening cream by the use of a lactic ferment, which has been claimed to have been made by a Mr. Boyd, a creamery owner of Illinois, is said to consist of a mixture with sweet cream of a certain quantity of soured skimmed milk which has been warmed to 90 degrees, and then kept for twenty-four hours in a close vessel from contact with air. This soured milk or "lactic ferment" is called a "starter."

There is nothing new in this process in principle. It is simply souring the cream by adding milk to it, and this had been done years ago by my grandmother, and by my great-grandmother, in making butter.

It is the use of the lactic ferment which makes the process effective. Instant relief from first dose of lactic acid, like magic, prepares the body for the full fat.

Color in Horses.

The experience of Paris and New York horse car companies is said to be that gray horses are the longest lived and give the greatest amount of service.

Black horses are equally good.

Black horses are the strongest and the best staying power, especially in summer.

Days show an average. Black hooved horses are the stronger and tougher.

FRIDAY, MAY, 16, 1890.

LOCAL ITEMS.

Wilbur station, K. & P. Ry, post office has been closed.

It is feared that la grippe may again make the tour of the world.

Mr. Huffman, late of the Hoffman House, Napanee, has leased the Wheeler hotel in Tanworth for one year.

On Monday Mr. Richard Marigian, shipper, and his "mud-cat" gang loaded the ship ready with heading for Oswego.

Mr. P. Scrimshaw is building a large and substantial frame house at the Junction, the site of the one burned a few weeks ago.

Annie Dooley, aged thirteen years, of New York, attempted to skip two hundred times without stopping. In a short time after she went into convulsions and expired.

Rev. Mr. Alphonse, President of the Montreal Conference of the Methodist Church, was asked recently to remove ministerial duties he preached too long. His sermon had one hour.

It is said that in many parts of the district the hay crop will prove a comparative failure owing to the unfavorable weather of the past winter. Many farmers have resolved to sell no more of their old hay, expecting a great rise in price next fall.

At a meeting of Kingston Presbyterians held in Orillia a man was sustained from the congregation by Rev. John Fairlie, of Hawkesbury. The meeting was fixed for Tuesday, 27th May. The Rev. H. Grayce will preside and address the minister, Rev. J. Gallagher will preach, and Rev. Mr. McGilivray will address the people.

Rev. Henry Beers, formerly a clergyman of the Methodist Church, committed suicide in 1847. He had been a member of the Tafaraqui Bay, at Barriefield. Dressed as a woman, he was in early life an eloquent preacher and filled charge in many districts of Ontario, retiring in 1847. He was deposed from the ministry in 1850. He was twice married but for some years he was a widower from his wife. He was exceedingly eccentric and was, no doubt, insane when he committed the rash act. He leaves property worth over $100,000.

Pulpit Exchange.

Rev. A. Young, of Napanee, will conduct the morning service in the Church of the Saviour next Sabbath. Rev. R. J. Craig, M. A., filling Mr. Young's pulpit in Napanee.

Jubilee Singers.

A large audience greeted the Canadian Jubilee Singers at the Methodist church on Tuesday evening and listened to their melodies with great pleasure. The applause was generous, and well merited, to this popular company. A silver collection was taken at the door and a good sum was realized in the church in the venture.

Watson's Jewellers.

The local corps of the Salvation Army will hold a welcome home meeting on Saturday evening, 17th inst., for Capt. Cardiff and Lieut. Wm. Davison on their return from special meetings and grand demonstration in Toronto. Capt. Cardiff has recovered his health, suffering from his duties. Capt. Gale is expected to be present on Saturday evening. The meetings in Toronto were very successful the large temple being well filled.

Peter Johnson at the Rathbun Company.

Chief Armour has given his decision in the suit of Peter Johnson versus the Rathbun Company which has been a long and recent cause in Kingston. A great deal of interest has been manifested in this case which affected the surveys of the township of Almonte. The decision was in favour of the Rathbun Company. Chief Armour deciding that the principle adopted by Surveyor M. J. Butler in making his survey was, in his opinion, the correct one, and as the survey which was the trespass complained of was not on the lands of the plaintiff, or of his assignee, the action must be dismissed with costs.

High School.

The chemical laboratory in the high school will soon be completed in all its arrangements so that the students can perform their experiments and pursue their researches in an efficient manner. The library is being put into shape, a good nucleus of books having been already formed. The blackboard equipment is excellent, and the apparatus for the laboratory is complete and is passing their examinations with commendable diligence. Mr. John Marigian and a force of men and horses have been busy employed grading the grounds, and Mr. Lovell, of the Deseronto Cemetery, has been superintending the decorative portion of the work. The plan of the grounds has been developed and everything indicates beautiful surroundings for the school and its pupils.

Commissioner Marrigan is grading north Mill street.

Rev. A. Young conducted the services in the Presbyterian church last Sunday forenoon. Rev. H. J. Craig taking Mr. Young's place.

The boardwalk and street in front of many business places in town present a disorderly appearance on Sunday by a neglect to remove all rubbish on Saturday evening.

As there were not sufficient members present to constitute a quorum, no meeting of the town council was held last week, but the town appears to get along just as well, with out a council as with it.

On the recommendation of Mr. J. B. Reid, architect, the terra cotta fire proofing material, manufactured by the Rathbun Company will be used in the erection of the new hospital at Kingston.

The Tribune has a petition asking for the nomination of Peter Davis, Jr. in circulation in Belleville and a large number of signatures were obtained.

A fire would have been an improvement in some of the churches last Sunday. The air is so bad in them that the victims of la grippe have yet cast aside growing over the cold reception they experienced.

We have received from the Belleville Business College, Belleville, a copy of a very neat circular giving information concerning the complete and comprehensive commercial training imparted in that successfully managed institution.

Several dangerous holes have been made in the local roads this season, the carters having heavy loads into yards. If a board or plank were laid down before they attempt this a saving to the road would be effected.

The members of Deseronto Court, Independent Order of Foresters, contemplate holding a grand picnic and demonstration on Dominion Day of this year. Members of the different courts in the district will be asked to participate.

The Ella Ross ran against a log on Monday morning, and one of the buckets of her wheel was broken and had to be sawed out before she could proceed on her way. The Hero also struck a log on Saturday night about the same place.

Mr. Robt. Pearson left on Monday for Lindsay to assist in making some changes to the property of Mr. J. B. Reid, recently acquired by the Rathbun Company. The work will be done under the supervision of Mr. Wm. Mitchell of Deseronto.

Capt. John Gale, of Gananoque, spent a few days in town this week and assisted Capt. Cardiff at successful meetings in the Salvation Army barracks. The Captain is looking well and was cordially greeted by a host of friends in Deseronto.

Mrs. Preston and Morden of the Napanee Collegiate Institute visited the new high school building on Wednesday and took notes of the manner in which the grounds are kept. They considered them beautiful and will probably adopt a similar plan in Napanee.

The Boundary Road—most unfortunate of all roads in this province—has been selected by the great mass of the community as the dumping ground for all refuse from back yards, etc. Some parties, as if to show their utter disregard for bodies of health and moral education, whether produced in town or township, have dumped their scald within fifteen feet of the Napanee road. Comment is unnecessary.

Dr. Ortonchuk, favored us with a pleasant call on Monday. He had just returned home from his visit to California and other parts of the Pacific coast, where he met with great success. He is to speak at the meeting of the Independent Order of Foresters. He was accompanied by Rev. Mr. Elb, a Congregational clergyman of Gravesend, England, who is enjoying a visit to "The Pines". Mr. Elb is a son of one of the worthies going to Australia and is now returning by the C. P. R. route.

A Corner in Shawnee.

TRUE STORY OF A WALL STREET HERO
BY HENRY CLEWS.

CHAPTER III. MR. WELLMAN'S PERE.

Each hand held a fragment of the tree. For once Daniel Hardy's small stock of wisdom served him well for the purposes of prophecy. Theodore Wellman roamed about the Posket forests for it may be two weeks, and then the definite announcement was made that he and Annie Stockwell were to be married. One day Daniel was busy extricating logs from the snarls and jams in the mill stream a half mile up the mill, when he came upon Wellman, his rod and bucket thrown aside, reclining idly in the shade and watching the picture-squeezes.

For a moment Daniel stood back of his rival, struggling with a tremendous impulse to throw him over the cliff.

Was it caution that restrained the brute within him? Did the human element in his nature shrink from murder unfairly done? Did it seem cowardly to take an enemy unawares?

A log that Daniel had started forward to hurl him over the waterfall. He had reached for the branch of a tree just above his head, and had wrenches it from the trunk. Holding it out at arms length he twisted the green fiber until the bark wrinkled and peeled, and each hand held a fragment of the limb. Both these he threw down at his rival's feet.

"Darn, you, Mr. Wellman," he hissed. Then he strode away into the forest.

Mr. Wellman looked after him in profound amazement. He glanced down at the broken limb, which had twisted in each part from Daniel's touch, and up at the tree from which it had been torn, and down at the black, rock flooded pool below the falls. His face had not lost its pallor, and as he picked up his fishing rod his hand trembled violently, and his step was unsteady, as he slowly took up his march to the village tavern.

Annie Stockwell was married in the October succeeding her engagement to Mr. Wellman. It is still related in Posket how Daniel Hardy went to the wedding and joined the festivities that followed. His behavior, it seems, was dignified, and his son-in-law never hinted at the determined purpose which had become the secret of his actions. Mr. Wellman took his wife upon a long European tour, and eventually they merged their lives in the social wilderness of New York.

Daniel "team'd it" through the winter, and when spring came he became a principal one of the village store keepers by applying for a situation. Let the arguments and explanations be understood, Daniel wanted to learn business; the store keeper thought well of him, and gave him the desired clerkship. Daniel developed a fondness for conversation and became acquainted with summer visitors who could inform him as to the methods of business on the Stock Exchange. He made a point to have failed to inquire the exact meaning of a "corner."

Some of the older people were in debt lest Daniel would lose his head and wreck his life and little fortune in ignorant speculations. They regarded Wall street as a community of robbers, and were morally certain that no man with a good living elsewhere should venture in their way. But as Daniel kept at his post year after year, serving his employer faithfully, and now and then increasing his deposits in the bank, doubts as to his career changed to confidence that he would be a solid citizen some day, and might even to the world.

It was one of his enterprises in behalf of his employer consisted in securing an agreement with a great New York grocer to take a large quantity of butter from him at a lower rate than that usually paid, and then by personal canvass among the farmers securing all the butter they could make at a price somewhat less than that they usually received. The beans were in despair. They had given up the glock with which to fulfill their engagements to deliver. The obscure broker was ready to sell, but he wanted something like $100,000 in his pocket. It meant ruin to many, and there were several speedy suspensions. Among them was the house of Theodore Wellman.

Soon after the announcement a messenger brought word to him that if he would call at Brown's office a proposition for a settlement would be laid before him. He went over at once and found others of his ruined associates on the same demand, but he alone was admitted in a back room. There sat Daniel Hardy, son of as old, but there was an expression of cold satisfaction in his eyes.

"You an' I don't speak edzackly the same language, Mr. Wellman," returned Daniel, "but I know that you didn't come to put your foot into it, and I kin understand that."

Mr. Wellman smiled and sat up. "That's one way of putting it, Mr. Hardy," he said, "but now that we meet here, where none of your good country people can take notice of us and spread exaggerated reports about us, it seems to me worth while that we should try to come to an understanding, for I believe you think I owe you an explanation."

"You owe me darned sight more'n that, Mr. Wellman," replied Daniel. Mr. Wellman at once became verycerous.

"I am sorry you think so," he began, "for you know, I can't see it. You must know that a woman's affections are not to be forced; you cannot hope to turn them into the channel you desire, and if she freely gives her heart to another, you cannot reasonably complain. It's hard, I admit, I think I know how you feel, for not so very long ago Miss Stockwell re-

"Don't you think," interrupted Daniel, "that her name might well be left out of this argument?"

"As you please, Mr. Hardy, but you see it was not for her we should not be talking in this way."

"No, sir!" exclaimed Daniel, "not by a thundering sight! Taint her as has brought you an' me to argyfyn', but you, Mr. Wellman."

Mr. Wellman bit his lips and half regretted that he had attempted to reason with this boorish rustic.

"Well," he said, "I suppose I am; let that pass. What I wanted to tell you was, and in saying it I take you for a real friend, is this: I am inclined that the lady in question is naturally fitted for a different kind of life than that she would lead if she settled down in Posket. You know that she has become a brilliant, educated lady, and it is perfectly natural that a man in the class to which she has raised herself should be more attractive to her than—ah—well, frankly, than an honest but uneducated man. I don't want to be offensive, but you must see what I mean."

This was a momentary confusion in Daniel's mind as he felt, rather than thought, that a girl who was born in Posket should find Posket good enough to live in, as had her own mother; and that a Posket boy whom she had encouraged to love her should be good enough to live with, but out of the bitter turmoils of his thoughts this came:

"You're a settin' yourself up, Mr. Wellman, to be a better man than I be. Well, I'm not disputin' but what you may be; but s'posin' you was to stand up, you ain't no way to git a good, squaregrip on either your legs or your better. He seems to understand stocks that's without operating, and he also came to know some of the faces that are rarely seen in the street. They are those of men who live at their ease, but watch the market, and now and then swoop down upon it, buy a lot of stock for cash, sell perhaps within a few days, and then retire and wait for another season of depression. Daniel watched such men and learned a lesson.

Even Mr. Wellman, man of the world and somewhat impressed with his own knowledge of human nature, was nonplussed by this proposition. He sat still for some time looking at the waters swirling past him, and then he stretched himself out lazily again and sat in the languid tones he had first employed.

"Well, if you can not look at this uncomfortable matter as a reasonable man should, you ought to take a business view of it. The young lady's affections were in the market. You made your bid, but I just happened to get a corner on them, and you ought to be content to stand your losses."

Then followed his inspection of the today's squeeze, smiling a little at his own cleverness in bringing a painful sensation to so brilliant and conclusive a close. The tumbling water made a deal of fuss in going over the cliff; it foamed and boiled, and shouted to the trees to see it pound the rocks in the pool below its impalpable powder; but above its pectoral roar Mr. Wellman, stretched at full length at the very edge of the descent, heard a sound that turned his bronzed face to a deathly pallor, and led him spring to his feet and turn about.

This was the beginning of a long series of frustrations, all conducted on a conservative basis, and all so far as known profitably; and at last it came to be a saying among those who knew him that one should follow Daniel Hardy. The difficulty was to discover what Daniel was doing. He was close as an oyster, and his operations were by no means confined to the office where he spent most of his time. Nevertheless, though he was regarded as a shrewd and successful man, nobody ever dreamt that he would become a dominant factor in the street.

Occasionally he met Mr. Wellman, then at the head of a banking house of some importance. The banker said to him:

"I am glad to hear that you are getting well, Mr. Hardy. If I can be of any assistance to you in the way of information, or otherwise, let me know."

"Thankie, Mr. Wellman," responded Daniel, gravely, "I may call on you some day."

The time came, after several years, that Daniel Hardy was invited into pools for financial deals in various securities. He accepted the invitation and advised others. From the well known character of the men with whom he associated I wonder how he escaped ruin more than once. His conservatism never deserted him, and beneath his uncouth exterior was a tenacious intellect, wonderfully sharpened by contact with the world.

Now all through these years he had been studying one thing more than all else: Theodore Wellman's business habits. He learned what the banker's favorite stocks for speculation were, through whom he dealt, and many details unnecessary to repeat here. At last came the famous "Shawnee railroad deal."

The common stock of this road amounted to $100,000,000, but it ruled in the market at about $200,000.

It was one of the "fancies" in which Mr. Wellman delighted to speculate. A selling movement began in this stock one day and it proceeded from Wellman's house. The price had gone down a full point, when an obscure broker on the floor of the exchange began to take every block of it that was offered. The selling ceased and a contrary movement set in. Still this obscure broker bought. Everybody began to rush for his Shawnee and offer it to this broker, and pretty soon the question ran from mouth to mouth:

"Who's been down to represent?"

"Nelly could tell," Up went the price of Shawnee, and at the close of the day's proceedings it was quoted at 70. The next day the movement continued and leading among the sellers was Mr. Theodore Wellman's broker. Every effort was made to break the mysterious purchaser, but without avail, and at the end of trading Shawnee was at 113, with a record of three thousand more shares sold than were in existence. On the third day the effort to break the purchaser ended in offering to him a lot of stock sent from a distant city by special train. Every share was taken.

The bears were in despair. They had given up the glock with which to fulfill their engagements to deliver. The obscure broker was ready to sell, but he wanted something like $100,000 in his pocket. It meant ruin to many, and there were several speedy suspensions. Among them was the house of Theodore Wellman.

Started, the broken speculator raised his head. Hardy stood up, and looked down at him for a full minute. Then he said slowly:

"I've been lookin' forward to this a long time, an' now you've got to settle, an' you can't, you can't do it."

"For God's sake, Daniel Hardy," cried Wellman, "I am in your power. You have ruined me; it will take much more than I have to do to get you off my back, but name your figure and let me know my bond."

"Crueley, is it? Huh, I've got you now," said Wellman. "I am completely broken by you. I've never been so bad in my life as I am now. I've been lookin' forward to this a long time, an' now you've got to settle, an' you can't, you can't do it."

LOCAL ITEMS.

To-morrow is the Queen's Birth Day. Mr. H. B. Rathbun has imported some Magum potatoes direct from Scotland. The Bay presented a stormy appearance last Saturday, the waves dashing over the steamer dock.

Where are those iron nuts for the machine shop? was a question which caused an agitation on Monday.

The Dominion parliament was prorogued on Friday, the session having been one of the longest on record.

The Tribune has donned a new dress of type and comes to us greatly improved in appearance.

The most welcome visitor of the week is what a subscriber writing from Cleveland, Ohio, styles THE TRIBUNE.

Mr. James Hargerty, of Huntington, has announced himself as a candidate to oppose Mr. Wood in North Hastings.

The Citizens' Band gave an open air concert last Friday evening, their selections being listened to by large crowds of citizens.

Mr. Meredith will not speak at Belleville during the present campaign, his engagements being too numerous in other parts of the province.

Three citizens met casually at the dock on Monday afternoon. They tipped the warehouse scales with an average weight of 210, the heaviest weighing 225 lbs.

On Saturday of last week the bundle of Toronto Worlds failed to appear. The postal inspector will draw his salary even with unfailing regularity.

The recent changes made by Mr. Pigden on the grand staff and the Central Office are pronounced improvement. He has now commenced work on Dwyer Park.

Valuable dogs owned by Messrs. James Stokes and T. Coughlin died from the effects of poison administered by some fiend who will yet find himself in the meshes of the law.

The East Hastings license commissioners met at Belleville, on the 15th inst., and appointed John Canniff, of Canifton, chairman to fill the vacancy created by the death of Mr. George Phillips.

Mr. A. Culbertson has been drawing in front of the city hall, flagstones of man-made proportions for the new street crossings which the street committee are laying down in various parts of the town.

The Canada Lumberman is now published in Toronto, where it has secured stations at 20 Yonge street, Arcade. This enterprising journal has met with great success and must continue to deserve an ever increasing patronage.

Mr. Patrick Fox, of Bay View Ranch, was drawing about 5,200 of bay to the Big Stables in town, and he has filled the corner of Dundas and Centre streets in a whole load up, almost filling Mr. E. Wilson's yard.

Mr. Robt. H. McKee, formerly of the Deseronto Cedar Mill and lately of Arnprior, is now manager of the Satsuma Lumber Company, Satsuma, Florida. We congratulate him on his appointment to such a responsible position.

The Bishop of Ontario will conduct ordination services in Christ Church, Belleville, on June 15th. A number of priests and deacons will be ordained. Mr. A. B. Whalley, formerly of the Reformed Episcopal church, Belleville, will be amongst those to be admitted to the diaconate.

Mr. Robert Geddes, of the Standard, on the Resolute last Sunday morning after a visit of over two weeks among friends in Oswego and Rochester. He found large colonies of former Deserontonians in both cities, all of whom applied to him for information. Mr. Geddes was a member of the Board of Trade eight years ago. He finds wonderful changes in that handsome city since that time. There is every evidence of growth and substantial prosperity.

It is to the interest of every person having fruit trees as well as to the welfare of his neighbor's trees to cut out the knapsack of the Standard for the law respecting black knot of fruit trees. Whether a visit of this kind to the garden or in the orchard, it should be promptly and properly treated, either in the removal of the knots, where little exists, or the destruction of the tree, when it has apparently so plentifully as to make its removal impossible.

It is to the interest of every person having fruit trees as well as to the welfare of his neighbor's trees to cut out the knapsack of the Standard.

The World of Vancouver, B. C., says that W. C. Archer left on the 1st inst. for the Premier on an extended trip to England. After a glance at Seattle, he will go on to Victoria, then back to Whistler whence he will go by the steamer Empress via New York to Glasgow. He will visit a number of points of interest in Great Britain and on his return, will return with Mr. Archibald, his partner, A. J. Holmes, who will manage the business during his absence.

THE SOLDIER'S DOG

BY SUTTER-LAUMANN.

CHAPTER III.

The dog tickled his hands.

A mad race began. The uouaves had hurriedly stripped steps of the hostile foot soldiers pursuing them; they felt the Prussians at their heels, and they swore furiously, ashamed to have to fly in this manner.

"Uulhans!" exclaimed some one.

Indeed, at their left, the uouaves could distinguish, in the penumbra, the galloping cavalrymen and could hear the noise of the horses' hoofs. The uulhans were trying to head off the uouaves in order to keep them between two fires.

"Great God!" exclaimed Bayardet, "we must reach the edge of the woods; once there, we can laugh at them."

A horseman passed at full speed with out seeing them at a distance of thirty yards.

"Lieutenant," said a uouave, "let me bring that rascal down!"

"Not yet."

And Bayardet knocked the lifted weapon on the saddle.

But the Prussians knew the ground very well. Their cavalrymen had passed the uouaves, and the circus was closing in. In a few moments all retreat would be cut off. The night had grown less dark, and the uulhans could be seen very distinctly, swiftly going and coming, with their long lances in their hands, like foragers.

"So much the worse!" shouted Bayardet; "for at will, but keep running."

Ten shots followed this order. The uouaves disappeared, and all was silence again. But the Prussians had only a few seconds. A formidable rattle of musketry rang through the air, then a second, then a third. The Prussians were firing by rounds and at random. No one was hit.

"Keep on running," said the lieutenant.

Already in the half light the uouaves saw in the distance the tree tops of the thick grove that surrounded the plain, when just ahead of them there was a dash, and a discharge made the earth tremble. A few men fell. The uouaves were wounded off.

"Piss!" cried Bayardet, "wounded and file to the right!" cried Bayardet.

He had not noticed, not far away, a hut, in the shelter of which his little troop could offer resistance for a long time. The uouaves reached it, improvised barricades, and opened fire upon the enemy.

Nevertheless, the Prussian advanced. They were within hearing distance, and from time to time one of their officers summoned the French to surrender at discretion. Each time he was answered by a shower of bullets.

Then to the din of the combat succeeded again an overwhelming silence. The Prussians, despairing of overcoming this handful of brave fellows, and not wanting to carry the hut by storm, which would have cost them too many lives, had resolved undoubtedly to establish a blockade, so that the French would finally lay down their arms.

Thus an hour passed.

Bayardet, who had picked up the gun of one of the wounded in order to shoot like a common soldier, was very much alarmed. Never could he pass over the bodies of the Prussians; there were too many of them. The uouaves had used up half of their cartridges, and when their ammunition should be exhausted their last resource would be to risk almost certain death in an attempt to force their way out with the bayonet—unless, perchance, it did not even dream of surrendering. He was much depressed.

What would then think of him that throwing himself into the arms of the wolf? Of him, an old soldier accustomed to all the tricks of the Arabs, who had fought for twenty years in Algeria, in the Crimea, in Italy, in Mexico, and who had just got himself caught like an ordinary conscript, with fifty men? Whatever his heroism, he could force the blame that would be heaped upon him. It was dishonor.

"I am a soldier," said his sergeant, "there is one way to be a star if you like. Perhaps I can slip through the meshes of these eaters of sanguine! I will reach the camp and bring back aid, for surely they cannot leave us in this box."

"I was thinking of that," answered Bayardet; "but I did not dare to propose it to you, so great is the risk of losing one's skin. Go ahead. You will take Sidi; he will guide you. If you are wounded or captured let the dog go; he will get there unless a bullet stiffs him out."

And, tearing a leaf from his memorandum book, the lieutenant scribbled these few words in pencil:

"Have fallen into an ambush. Come if you can. You have only to follow Sidi. There is no time to lose."

He signed the note and fastened it to the dog's neck with a piece of gilt cord to the collar.

The sergeant opened the door and slipped out, followed by Sidi.

Another half hour passed. The uouaves discussed in low tones the probabilities of success. "The sergeant has passed," said Bayardet. "We are saved." These words had scarcely left the lieutenant's lips when a few shots were heard two or three hundred yards away. Evidently the sergeant had been making a long search for an opening; he had been seen, but had he succeeded? An exciting question which each minute anxiously asked him. For six minutes there was another little volley, but farther off than the previous one.

"There, that is for Sidi!" growled Bayardet. "The sergeant must have been caught. If they didn't hit the dog, he must be far away!"

The dog, with a commingling of rage and mirth, at every moment Bayardet consulted his watch, the only jewel that he had, and he was painfully surprised to see that the hands had scarcely moved, not even the minute hand. He began to believe that the accursed watch had stopped, and yet he had been careful to wind it. Besides, several of the uouaves had stopped, and the dog had a question to ask.

"The dog still has his both sides, as it is, and he can stop both sides of taking breath before the final shock. But the calm was not of long duration. A sharp hiss rent the air, soon followed by a report: a shell had just fallen into the left of Bayardet's company, causing a few men to fall, then another—a terrible storm beat upon the uouaves. The French cannon, stationed on the ridge, had opened fire.

clouds of dull smoke zigzagged by red fire.

The two battalions of the Third army awaited this avalanche that was about to fall on them. Diminished by a good third, in tattered uniforms, black with powder, stained with blood and greatly fatigued, the uouaves, with that inexhaustible spirit which has contributed as much to their victory to the war, were now more than ever, laughing and laughing, with that nervous laugh which is the forerunner of anger.

Bayardet was in front of his company, of which he had taken the command, the captain having been disabled. Sidi was lying on his belly, his nose between his hands, his eyes closed, his teeth clenched, his body rigid, his heart thumping.

placed it in the dog's jaws. Then, as the dog closed his jaws, the man, who had been behind him, the latter repented in the most formal tone of command.

"Take the dog, still! Take it to the regt!"

The voice died out in a hiccup; but the lieutenant's features breathed a sublime joy, as the dog, as if he had understood—and perhaps he did—the value of the trust placed in him, started off like an angel from his master's side.

MAINLY FOR WOMEN.

Mrs. ELLEN PARKER of Chelsea, Mass., has been appointed to pilot the steam yacht "Yacht" Boston harbor.

Sir William Gull, a celebrated London specialist, said that a tight lacing was not conducive of bad complexion and not nose.

There is still living on a plantation in Lee county, Ga., a negro woman who does not know that she is free. She is totally deaf, and has never been made to understand about emancipation.

She—"But why is Miss C. wearing black?" He—"She is mourning for her husband."

"Why, she never had a husband."

"No; that is why she mourns."—Pick Me up.

Women inventors appear very often on the Patent Office records, and one of them who is especially known is said to have made a new eye-glass spring is said to have made a very good invention.

In a Maine school the other day the teacher was giving out masculine nouns for the pupils to write down the feminine corresponding.

The teacher asked the feminine of "hail" and the boys all wrote "girl" and the girls all wrote "hail."

Addressing the Mayor's Club at Boston the other day, Gen. Butler said that of a single class of eight pupils at the Lowell High School, five were girls and three boys.

John Garfield, a leading engineer, who is one of the most prominent of his profession, is a leading authority on the subject.

Thomas Townrowd is undoubtedly the oldest reporter, both in age and length of service, in America. He celebrated his 50th birthday last Tuesday. He began to report for Horace Greeley in 1841, and is still furnishing the news of Westchester to the New York papers.

In vaulting over a bar with a pole Miss Frothingham and Miss Jones showed great proficiency, clearing the crossbar when it was five feet two inches from the ground.

Mrs. Lynn Linton says in the London Musical World that the performances provided in the drawing-rooms by hostesses in the interior were not equal to those of the girls with voices no louder than a reed, and shrill and twanging as a jew's-harp clip the words of an absurdly sentimental song to an audience whose present pleasure they destroy, and who have to feign a satisfaction at the end.

Parliamentary inquiries have been debating whether the host or the guest should enter a carriage first, says the Chicago News. After much argument the following conclusions have been reached: If the host is a woman she should enter first, and should seat herself in the carriage, and if the host is a man, she should not neglect to explain to her guests that she wishes her to occupy the seat of honor at her right. If the host is a man the guest enters the carriage first and takes the seat to the right of where the host is to sit. In driving a carriage a gentleman should always give place in front of any guest when he would rather walk around to the farther side of the carriage and enter by the outside entrance.

Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes is compelled to relinquish his residence, except with his personal friends, at 14, Grosvenor Gardens, because of his failing health.

"I am not perfect," he writes to a friend, "and the fatigues of writing are wearing upon me, and although it will cost me an effort, I must throw off the load which at 'one hundred and twenty' is too much for my shoulders."

The Rev. Dr. Parkhurst, of New York, used this remarkable language in the course of a sermon at the Madison Square Presbyterian Church: "It is as much a Christian's duty to love his country as God." To an American who asked him if he thought it right to abandon his national religion as the Sabbath on the Mount. It is as much the duty of a New York Christian to go to the polls election day as for him to go to the Lord's table communion day."

The Tribune

FRIDAY, MAY, 30, 1890.

LOCAL ITEMS.

Black bass are unusually plentiful in the Bay this year.

The festive mosquito is unusually numerous this spring.

Mr. Pigden has been sodding and otherwise improving Dexter Park and surrounding territory.

Mr. May has been setting out flowers of all varieties in Central Park, which now presents a very pretty appearance.

Sienna is indeed here at last; the inmates of the Dundas street orphanage have taken off their double windows.

Quite a number took advantage of the annual trip to make excursions to Belleville, Picton, Kingston, etc., on Saturday and Monday last.

Mr. T. H. Nesmith has moved the barn at the rear of his residence so that it no longer juts out on the street, thereby effecting a great improvement.

A force gale, accompanied by heavy rain sprung up on Sunday afternoon. Trees were blown down and boards sent flying from piles at a lively rate.

Work on the Grand Trunk double track between Belleville and Napanee is progressing very rapidly and in a few days the ballast train will be at work,

Mrs. Joseph Carwell underwent a difficult operation for the removal of a cancer on Tuesday. The operation was successfully performed by Dr. Newton, assisted by Dr. Demarest.

Mr. Chan J. Rykert, Conservative, was re-elected in Lincoln last week by a majority of 27. It is probable that this will end this matter and that Mr. Rykert will again take his seat in the house of commons.

A carload of machinery for the mill recently acquired by the Rathbun Company at Lindsay was shipped from Deseronto on Tuesday, and Mr. George Gordon and several mechanics left next day to place it in position.

A meeting of the Deseronto Canoe and Boating Club was held at the general offices of the Rathbun Company this evening at eight o'clock. As some amendments to the by-laws are proposed, a full meeting is requested.

Mr. I. H. Walker had a tooth extracted the other day and it bled freely. The hemorrhage was supposed to be completely checked but it became afresh during the night when he was asleep and it required the presence of Dr. Newton to prevent serious consequences.

Mr. Wm. Evans has been busy with a number of men placing the new turn-table for the Bay of Quinte railway in position. This turn-table which is 85 feet in length was manufactured by the Brown Manufacturing Company, Belleville.

There were numerous expressions of indignation on Tuesday on account of several teachers of the public school having thoughtlessly dismissed the children in the face of the heavy showers by which the juveniles were drenched to the skin.

The fences about the custom house and the residence of Mr. Davis' office have been repaired and other changes are contemplated which will effect a complete revolution in that establishment, one of the old landmarks of Deseronto.

Mr. Martin Maloney has purchased from Mr. George Stewart the house and lot on Mill street, south of Mr. Stewart's own residence. It is well known as the house formerly occupied by the late Edward Gracy. The price paid was $1,600.

Excavations continue to break at the Deseronto shipyards. Schre, W. Y. Emory and Bullock were up recently on the marine railway for repairs. The Ocean Wave was there to have a leak stopped, and the tug Norah was up on the ways to have her wheel repaired.

There is a postoffice in Idaho called Deer Valley, with a mail twice per week. For some weeks last winter the only letters received were for a young man from his home in Chicago, and the inhabitants finally inserted instead of Capt. Donnelly as a member of the commission a unintentional injustice to this capable official.

Mr. John McCullough is making steady changes in the properties south of his new block. Mr. Godfrey Colp contemplates the erection of a fine block on the south west corner of Elgin and St. George street. St. George street will be a thoroughfare. An old barn opposite Dalton's furniture store is an eyesore to residents and business is not on that thoroughfare. Its removal is desirable.

SOCIES. OF CANADA.
REGULAR MEETINGS, every Friday and Saturday evenings in each month in hall corner of Thomas and George streets. W. J. MALLEY, Pres.

Trouble Ahead.

Boys have been breaking many of the street lamps of late with stones hurled from rooftops. The gas works officials have very properly denuded to end this state of affairs and any offender who is found thus destroying their property will be prosecuted to the strictest rigour of the law. Boys beware!

Band Concert.

The Citizens' Band will give another open air concert at their hall, located on the corner of Elgin and St. George street, on Saturday evening at 8 o'clock. The band is composed of the following: Leader, Agustine Daring; Life is a Dream, F. R. Zikoff; Minor vs Major, Southwell; Night in New York, Walston; Scotch Medley, Warren; Nellie Walston; Petter; Dick's March, Petter; God Save the Queen, etc.

Stroke by a Pender.

Dunmark Donley, a boy about twelve years of age met with a sad accident on the Hero as she was approaching the dock at Bath on Monday. The lad was standing by the railing when one of the fenders was lowered by a boathand, letting it down with stunning force. Fortunately it struck him sideways. His face was badly lacerated and bruised.

Excursion to the Northwest.

The Canadian Pacific Railway Company have arranged for three special excursions to be made from Belleville to the Ontario on June 17th, return until July 27th; June 24th return until August 4th; July 8th, return until Aug. 18th. Rates to Deseronto, Mooney's $10; $12; $15; $18; $20; $25; $30; $35; $40; $45; $50; $55; $60; $65; $70; $75; $80; $85; $90; $95; $100; $105; $110; $115; $120; $125; $130; $135;
